George and John owned adjoining dairy farms and had become devoted friends. In fact, they were more like brothers than neighbors until the day they got into an argument over the ownership of a new calf.

The calf was on George’s land, standing by one of his cows, and so he said the calf was his.

“It is my calf,” John argued. “It is black and white like my Holsteins. You have all Jerseys.”

The argument escalated, turned bitter and the two friends stopped speaking to each other.

Believing their friendship was shattered, George built a dam to redirect water. This caused a large stream of water to run into the low place between the two knolls on which both men had built their houses. They were effectively isolated now.

John perceived this as a declaration of war. He said to his wife, “Two can play that game. If he wants isolation, I’ll give it to him!”

It was hard to think straight with bitterness hardening his mind. Then, he got the idea of building a high fence. He ordered a load of lumber.

As luck would have it, right after the lumber was delivered, a stranger came by. “I’m hungry and I have no money,” the stranger said. “Do you have work I can do?”

“Can you build a fence?” John asked.

“Yes,” the stranger replied. “As a matter of fact, I am a carpenter. I can build anything.”

John took him to the stream. “I’m going to be away all day tomorrow, but I want you to start building a fence along here,” he said, pointing to his side of the stream.

“Make it so tall and strong and hard to tear down.”

As soon as John got home the next day, he hurried down to the stream to look at the fence. To his astonishment, there was no fence! Instead, the stranger had built a bridge across the stream between the two farms.

Furious, and with clenched fist, John turned to the stranger. But before he could say a word, he heard George running across the bridge.

“John, John,” he yelled. “Thank you! Thank you, so much for building this bridge.” He threw his arms around his surprised friend. “Just think, we might have stayed enemies for life if you hadn’t built this bridge. I’m ashamed of myself. I was too proud to admit I was wrong. The calf is yours.”

“I can’t believe I was ready to destroy our friendship over one calf,” John answered, as the anger flowed out of him. Then he turned to the stranger and said, “You have done more for me this day than anyone has ever done. You have a job here for the rest of your life.”

The stranger smiled and shook his head, “I cannot stay. I have other bridges to build.”

The moral of this story, told at a story-telling contest, has a message for all of us. We have all built fences at times when we should have been building bridges. We can extend that thought to our town, our country and our world.

We may have little control over what happens in the world, but we can have the courage to start building bridges in all of our personal relationships with other people. After all, we are builders throughout our life, and often we build fences that we later regret. We use the same effort whether we are building a fence or a bridge. It is what we build that makes the difference.

Summer has arrived, and I hope you all are as excited about it as I am.

There’s nothing better than sunshine to lift your spirits and energize your soul. Summer is the season of play, the season that brings back memories of family vacations and the carefree days of frolicking by the lake or on the beach.

With most of the continental U.S. now easily accessible, it’s time to set the GPS to any direction you desire and head out on the road to either unknown or familiar places. If you haven’t selected a particular destination, consider joining up with fellow Escapees for rallies and events.

The 56th Escapade, Escapees RV Club’s largest rally, is taking place July 24–29, 2016, in the beautiful state of Vermont this year. If this will be your first Escapade, it’s sure to be great and you still have plenty of time to register. Escapade is five full days of everything an RVer needs: RV education, entertainment and fun. But, most of all, you get to meet and share in the camaraderie of Escapees members. This is an event where old friends unite, and new, life-long friendships begin. See page 12 for more about this event.

If you are unfamiliar with Escapees gatherings, check out pages 37 through 53. Within these pages is information on all Escapees groups and events.

Escapees chapters are regional groups formed throughout the U.S., Canada and Mexico and are listed by state and country on pages 38–40. The chapter rallies can be found by month on pages 45 and 46. Check the calendar to see if there are Escapees rallies and events in the areas you will be traveling through. Luncheons are also held throughout the U.S. and Canada, and you can find location information on pages 42 and 43.

For those who prefer a general gathering in the Western part of the U.S., the WARE (Western Area Rally for Escapees) rally (www.warerally.com) is held in April each year. The SKP ACRE (www.skpacre.com) (All Chapters Rally East) is held in April as well, and takes place in the Eastern region of the U.S. You can visit their individual Websites for further details.

Escapees special interest Birds Of a Feather (BoF) groups also hold gatherings and often meet at Escapade. The listing for these groups, along with contact information, can be found on pages 50 to 52. BoF groups cover a wide variety of activities and interests, and there may be one that is a fit for you.

If planning a vacation-within-a- vacation with other Escapees appeals to you, check out the Escapees Head Out Program (HOP) events on pages 20 and 21. HOP events are theme-related events or activities at unique and scenic locations around the world. You can join Escapees for a cruise or meet up with a group at a popular landmark. Planning a destination trip is fun, but even more comforting and exciting with like-minded RVing friends.

Once you’ve attended the rallies and events and need a little rest and relaxation, be sure to stop by an Escapees friendly park. You will feel right at home. A convenient list of the parks and amenities are on pages 47 to 49.

So, what are you waiting for? Gas up the rig, load up Fido and Fluffy and head out to an Escapees event. There will be plenty of hugs and handshakes awaiting your arrival. Have a happy and safe summer of traveling.
Work is hard.
RVing shouldn’t be.

A Message from the Board
By Shawn Loring #76442, Escapees CEO, and the Escapees Board of Directors

The Good Fight
Those who chose to leave the sedentary life in a stick-and-brick home in favor of living full-time or seasonally in an RV are true adventurers. For many RVers, the ability to live and travel in an RV is the manifestation of the American dream. Full-time, or seasonal, RVers often worked their entire lives with the goal of some day traveling from Canada to Latin America and all parts in-between. Others find ways to incorporate RVing into their lifestyle while they are still working.

Upon announcing to friends and family that they are hitting the dusty trail, it is not uncommon for RVers to be met with quizzical looks and a battery of questions. (I am sure they are secretly jealous.) The fact remains that this lifestyle of freedom and adventure is unusual—wonderful, but askew from the norm. Most of society is confused by the idea of full-time and seasonal RVing, and one way this confusion materializes is in the laws of the land.

From time to time, even with the best of intentions, federal, state and local legislative bodies overlook or neglect the RVing community in the creation of laws and regulations. These laws can impact almost every aspect of this lifestyle, including the ability to register vehicles, establish a domicile and can even interfere with the right to vote.

Advocacy
One of the benefits Escapees provides for the entire RVing community is advocacy. We fight for the rights of RVers, regardless of whether or not they are members, because Escapees is a values-driven organization. And, in the spirit of being a Total Support Network for All RVers, we feel it is our calling to help defend RVers’ rights when we can.

For instance, HUD (Housing and Urban Development Department), a federal agency, decided to alter their definition of RVs. While HUD’s impetus for the changed language appeared to exclude RVs from HUD manufacturing requirements, their definition of “RVs” distinguished RVs from mobile homes based on their use. Escapees’ concern was that language in a federal agency rule could prevent RVers, like you, from living in your RVs full-time or even seasonally. In addition, our research found that state and local entities incorporated HUD’s definition of an RV directly into their own rules, laws and regulations. A potential consequence of the insertion of HUD’s definition into these state and local rules, laws and regulations, is that your rights are shaped and limited in unforeseeable ways—limiting your ability to enjoy the RV lifestyle in the manner of your choosing. Escapees wrote a comprehensive explanation of the potential impact of the proposed language and included suggested alternative language to HUD. At the time of this writing, the issue remains unresolved, but Escapees continues to advocate for you.
“In his letter to the committee member, Jim explained the impact of the ordinance on boondockers and included the “RVer’s Good Neighbor Policy” to demonstrate our endeavor to act in an amiable and community-minded manner.”

We often do not advertise our advocacy until we have successful resolution of the issue because we may be more effective as one voice as opposed to close to 60,000 separate voices. As an example, recently, an Anchorage, Alaska, Assembly committee proposed a ban on the popular RVer practice of boondocking in the parking lots of retail stores. The concern was that boondockers create health and safety issues, are unsightly and cause a loss of business for commercial RV parks. Escapees advocacy director Jim Koca #86367, among others, petitioned the committee member who initiated the proposed ordinance. In his letter to the committee member, Jim explained the impact of the ordinance on boondockers and included the “RVer’s Good Neighbor Policy” to demonstrate our endeavor to act in an amiable and community-minded manner. The committee member abandoned the proposed ordinance before he submitted it to the Assembly for action. (We encourage you to review the “RVer’s Good Neighbor Policy,” found on page 18. We strive to be respectful of the communities we visit.)

Dear Fellow RVers,

Some of the most respected RV consumer clubs have joined together to support your right to park on private businesses’ parking lots overnight under the following code of conduct:

Industry-sanctioned Code of Conduct (RVers’ Good Neighbor Policy)

1. Stay one night only!
2. Obtain permission from a qualified individual.
3. Obey posted regulations.
4. No awnings, chairs or barbecue grills.
5. Do not use hydraulic jacks on soft surfaces (including asphalt).
6. Always leave an area cleaner than you found it.
7. Purchase gas, food or supplies as a form of thank you, when feasible.
8. Be safe! Always be aware of your surroundings and leave if you feel unsafe.

If your plans include touring the area, staying for more than one night or necessitate conduct not within the code, please relocate to a local campground. It’s the right thing to do!

Most of the complaints lodged regarding RV parking on business parking lots have to do with aesthetics and perceived abuse of the privilege. There are a variety of competing interests that were balanced to arrive at this industry-sanctioned code of conduct. As you can see, the code of conduct is nothing more than an RVers’ “Good Neighbor” policy. Not following the code has serious consequences and is detrimental to the rights of all RVers. Already, some municipalities have passed ordinances to prohibit parking on private business property overnight.

Please do not take offense to this letter; it is only provided as a reminder that RVers must be perceived as good neighbors or there will be more pressure to institute state, county and local ordinances to prohibit parking on private business property.

We wish you safe and happy travels,

“It is important to note, that Escapees learned of this proposed legislation from a member. You can help us by alerting Escapees to proposed rules, laws and regulations that may impact the RVing community.”

Escapees Needs You!
However, advocacy is not only one of the callings of Escapees; it is the responsibility of all RVers. There are times when we need your help in the way of sending letters and e-mails, posting comments and calling your federal, state and local representatives. For instance, this year a bill was introduced in South Dakota’s legislature that attempted to exclude full-time RVers who chose South Dakota as their state of domicile from voting in South Dakota. The acts of registering to vote and voting are among the common factors that courts will weigh when determining whether to uphold a domicile election. The legislators attempt to preclude RVers, like you, from voting in South Dakota was tantamount to exclusion from domiciling in South Dakota. Escapees, with your help and others like you sending letters and e-mails, petitioned the senator and congressman who introduced the bill. They received so many responses that they revoked the proposed bill.

It is important to note, that Escapees learned of this proposed legislation from a member. You can help us by alerting Escapees to proposed rules, laws and regulations that may impact the RVing community. Please do not assume that we know about pending legislation as it is impossible for Escapees to track every proposed rule, law and regulation. If you know of an issue that threatens to directly impact the RVing community, please contact Escapees at 888-757-2582 or e-mail info@escapees.com. Escapees will continue to advocate where and when we can.

As the senator and the congressman removed the bill from the South Dakota congressional committee, the senator stated that he would find a legally valid way to reintroduce the legislation—illustrating while we are victorious at times, there is always a need to keep fighting the good fight.

Thomas Jefferson famously stated, “Do you want to know who you are? Don’t ask. Act! Action will delineate and define you.” 📅.

Make the New England area your destination and include the 56th Escapade, July 24–29, 2016, in Essex Junction, Vermont, in your summer travel plans. It’s the perfect time to explore New England and the Northeast coastal states. The Champlain Valley Exposition Center hosts Escapade in 2016 and warmly welcomes Escapees members and Escapade attendees.

Destination Vermont!
The nearby town of Burlington lies on the shore of Lake Champlain and is the largest city in Vermont. It boasts an ambiance that is equally charming and chic. While both picturesque and quaint, it sparkles with energy and class and offers a wide range of interesting things to explore. From dinner boat cruises to biking or kayaking the blue-green lake, to partaking of the many eateries, wineries, breweries and cheese-makers, there’s no shortage of diversions to enjoy.

The Champlain Valley Exposition Center is well-suited for Escapade activities with ample seating for assemblies, comfortable seminar rooms and easy access to exhibit halls and events and for attendees. With refreshing summer temperatures the norm, it’s the ideal location for warm weather activities. Electric and water hookup sites are available at the Expo Center, along with limited boondocking options.
Escapade RV Education

There is a full array of informational, technical, travel and lifestyle offerings on the Escapade seminar schedule. You’ll find instruction to determine if you are operating within safe weight limits, guidance on making the most of your RV travel experience, how to find volunteer and work-camping positions on the road and workshops to help you master your personal electronic devices and computing skills. Both novice and seasoned RVers benefit from the knowledge imparted during the week of Escapade.

Join the Geeks on Tour, Chris and Jim Guld #101167, CM #722, for one of several training sessions to brush up on your computer skills. Learn the nuances of Google Maps, master “The Cloud” or discover new ways to stay in touch with friends, old and new, via blogs and Facebook. Visit www.GeeksonTour.TV for more information on Chris and Jim Guld. (Find information on Escapade pre-event workshops with the Geeks on Tour on the Escapade Website.)

Well-known speakers Nick and Terry Russell #56740, CM #786, will be on the agenda, and Nick will have copies of his popular book “Highway History and Back Road Mystery” on hand. He will also provide informative presentations on frugal RVing and writing on the road as well as an abundance of RVing information imparted by Nick in his own inimitable way.

The knowledge shared among Escapees members is priceless. There is no better time or place to share in the “give and take” of RV expertise than Escapade.

A Full Week of Evening Entertainment

Sunday night, Nashville singer/comedian Jimmy Travis is the featured entertainment. Describing a Jimmy Travis show or presentation is a lot like trying to herd cats! It’s not impossible, but definitely takes some doing. He’s funny, creative, spontaneous and energetic, and, since he frequently interacts with the audience, no two shows are ever the same. Simply put, Jimmy Travis is unique. It’s a “not-to-be-missed” show.

Monday night, the fun and entertainment continues with the Marlins. You’ve never heard a group of entertainers quite like these four brothers: Gary, Jace, Rick and Robert. Performing together for more than 25 years, they’ve shared the stage with such luminaries as Lee Greenwood, the Smothers Brothers and Merv Griffin. The Marlins’ original song, “I Believe in America,” was included in the 9/11 Memorial Museum in New York City. Their musical repertoire covers the entire spectrum of country, rock, big band, pop, classical, jazz and bluegrass. Marlin performances often include music from artists like Glenn Miller, Willie Nelson, the Beatles, the Beach Boys, Liberace, Neil Diamond, Sinatra, Elvis and Andrew Lloyd Weber.

Wednesday evening is an Escapade favorite, Ham-O-Rama, filled with Escapees talent and guaranteed to keep you entertained. Directed by Diane Larrabee #49426, it’s an event that just keeps getting better each year. Even you can try out to be a part of Ham-O-Rama.

Thursday night, plan to join your Escapees friends for a final night of fun at the farewell party. Hosted by Brenda and Dave Neil #26978, enjoy lively conversation, fun, dancing, music and vocals by Johnny Goodrum #65732.

Of course, there are door prize drawings most evenings, jam sessions, socials, bingo and cards and games. Save a lot of energy for the evenings; you’ll be glad you did.
Vermont HOPs

After Escapade, take a relaxing HOP or two. Let us do the driving, sit back and enjoy. HOP events are an exciting way to meet fellow Escapees friends. Board a luxury coach with a knowledgeable tour guide, and view the beautiful and charming roads of Vermont while learning about the region’s rich history.

On the Maple Syrup, Basin Harbor and Lake Champlain HOP, you will enjoy:
- Dakin Farm and hors d’oeuvres stop
- Taste the famous Vermont maple syrup
- Basin Harbor—some of the most beautiful views in the world!
- Buffet lunch included at Basin Harbor Club.
- Cruise on Lake Champlain.
- Lake Champlain Maritime Museum
- Stop—I scream for ice cream!

Visit www.escapees.com/store/category/39-escapade-products to preorder your shirts. Shirts will also be available for purchase at Escapade in limited quantities and sizes.
Escapees RVers’ Boot Camp

Escapees RVers’ Boot Camp will take place July 21–23, prior to Escapade. It’s a wonderful way to increase your RV confidence to a whole new level and add three days of fun and education to Escapade. Visit www.escapees.com/bootcamp for details and registration information.

Escapees SmartWeigh

The SmartWeigh team will be on hand with the Escapees SmartWeigh program. Have your RV professionally weighed to make sure that you are operating safely and within legal limits. Visit www.escapees.com/smartweigh for more information. Visit the SmartWeigh booth near the market area to schedule your personal weighing session.

Escapade Chili Cook-Off

HOT, HOT, HOT! Sponsored by Alliant Credit Union and the Rich Holke team, the fifth annual Escapade chili cook-off to benefit Escapees CARE will kick off at the 56th Escapade in Essex Junction, Vermont. You can participate by cooking up a pot of your favorite chili or by joining the fun as you judge and taste them all; then vote with a buck or two. All proceeds go to the Escapees CARE facility. Each contender is awarded the Escapade Chili Cook-off contender pin.

First-place winner receives the title of Escapade Chili Champ and the coveted winner’s apron and champion pin, along with a cash prize of $175! Second place takes home $75 and third place wins $50.

Bring your favorite chili recipe to Escapade and join the fun and games. It’s all in the name of a worthy cause and designed for fun with Escapees friends. For entry details and a complete list of the official rules of the Escapade Chili Cook-Off, visit Escapade chili cook-off rules at: www.escapees.com/escapade.

A Lifetime of Learning

Escapade offers an extensive lineup of RV-related educational and lifestyle seminars and workshops. Sessions on electrical systems, fire safety, computer skills and volunteering at national parks will keep you both engaged and challenged.

John and Kathy Huggins, #88896, well-known authors and developers of Living the RV Dream Website, blog and Internet radio show, will present “Living the RV Dream…Lessons Learned” and share many valuable resources for RVers.

Kimberly Travaglino, #123940, co-founder of the popular Fulltime Families RV blog and Website, will discuss educational, economical and fun RV itineraries for children and grandparents alike as she presents “Have Grandchildren, Will Travel.” Kimberly is also the author of the best seller, How to Hit the Road; Making Your Family’s Full-Time RV Dreams a Reality and one half of the dynamic podcasting duo at Roadschool Moms. Her family of six has been traveling the country via RV since 2010. They have been to 39 states to date and have no end to their journey in sight. For more information about adventuring across America as a family, visit www.fulltimefamilies.com.

From smartphones to SmartWeigh, Escapade is designed for smart traveling, with an outstanding seminar selection that promises to keep everyone on the cutting edge of products and RV information.

Xscapers Convergence

Xscapers, the community of Escapees RV Club geared toward working RVers, will be converging at Escapade. If you are part of the group, or think the community will appeal to you, plan to park with us by choosing water/electric when registering and printing out the special Xscapers designator that you will receive via e-mail. Be sure to review the information guide upon arrival for the time and location of activities. To learn more, visit xscapers.com.

Xscapers have partnered with Fulltime Families to bring a children’s program to the Escapade. This is the perfect opportunity for your children or grandchildren to partake in educational fun while you take advantage of attending the numerous seminars provided throughout the day. The program will be available Monday through Wednesday, 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. To learn more about Fulltime Families, visit www.fulltimefamilies.com.

Dear Fellow RVers,

Some of the most respected RV consumer clubs have joined together to support your right to park on private businesses’ parking lots overnight under the following code of conduct:

Industry-sanctioned Code of Conduct
(RVers’ Good Neighbor Policy)

1. Stay one night only!
2. Obtain permission from a qualified individual.
3. Obey posted regulations.
4. No awnings, chairs or barbecue grills.
5. Do not use hydraulic jacks on soft surfaces (including asphalt).
6. Always leave an area cleaner than you found it.
7. Purchase gas, food or supplies as a form of thank you, when feasible.
8. Be safe! Always be aware of your surroundings and leave if you feel unsafe.

If your plans include touring the area, staying for more than one night or necessitate conduct not within the code, please relocate to a local campground. It’s the right thing to do!

Most of the complaints lodged regarding RV parking on business parking lots have to do with aesthetics and perceived abuse of the privilege. There are a variety of competing interests that were balanced to arrive at this industry-sanctioned code of conduct. As you can see, the code of conduct is nothing more than an RVers’ “Good Neighbor” policy.

Not following the code has serious consequences and is detrimental to the rights of all RVers. Already, some municipalities have passed ordinances to prohibit parking on private business property overnight.

Please do not take offense to this letter; it is only provided as a reminder that RVers must be perceived as good neighbors or there will be more pressure to institute state, county and local ordinances to prohibit parking on private business property.

We wish you safe and happy travels,

“In order to get the optimum connection between the road and your tires, they must be inflated to the proper pressure.”

Weight and Safety Tip

Tire Contact Patch

By Jim Koca #86367, Escapees RVers’ Boot Camp Instructor

The tire contact patch, often referred to as the tire’s “footprint,” is the small portion of the vehicle’s tire that comes in contact with the roadway. It is the only connection between the road and your RV.

The contact patch is fairly small for a large RV, with each patch being about the size of half of a sheet of paper. As you can image, this small section of the tire has to hold a lot of weight and pressure.

As an analogy, the tire’s contact patch is similar to the shoes you wear. Just as your shoes flex and protect you from the surfaces you walk on, tires flex with every bump or rut that is hit. The contact patch also provides the traction needed while traveling down the road or turning around a corner.

Improper inflation pressure can actually reduce the size of this contact patch. The correct air pressure for each RV tire is determined by the weight of the load it is carrying. In order to get the optimum connection between the road and your tires, they must be inflated to the proper pressure.

Escapees SmartWeigh service can provide you with the individual wheel weights for your RV tires. Then you can set the correct air pressure for the weight the tires are carrying.

Is Your RV Overweight?
There’s only one way to know for sure:

Our program provides accurate individual wheel weights for your RV, toad and tow vehicle and it will help you trim the pounds if you need to.
When we made the impulse decision to go RVing full-time nine years ago, I wanted desperately to sell our house. Miraculously, we sold it in one weekend. But, by the time we had gotten rid of all of our other belongings and were ready to leave, our buyer had backed out. Oh, the tears I cried.

Knowing it was unlikely we’d find another buyer on such short notice, and not wanting to start our new life with our house in limbo or postpone our departure, we decided to put a “For Rent” sign in our yard. Within a few days we had our first tenants.

This wasn’t the first time I had leased out my home. I’ve been a long-distance landlord for 19 of the last 21 years. I never aspired to do that, but I’ve collected 226 rental payments from nine tenants in three houses, simply because the day I was ready to sell, the housing market was in a nose dive. Leasing for a while before selling it made sense.

Benefits of Leasing Your House
Personally, I like having a toehold in the real-estate market. If we had sold our home when we began traveling in 2007, I’m not sure an alternative investment would have kept us in a position to buy a comparable home when we are done with our travels a decade or more from now.

Whether we return to our old house after full-time RVing or trade it for a different one, and no matter what gyrations the housing market has been through, we will already be in the market rather than trying to jump back onboard at the present time.

Also, in my experience, it is much easier to find tenants than buyers, because a lease is a smaller commitment and tenants aren’t as fussy. Likewise, regardless of home values, monthly rents tend to stay flat or rise ever so slightly, but not go down.

Equity Position and Taxes

Your equity position on your house will determine whether leasing it long-term is sustainable. If you have little equity and a large mortgage, you may have negative cash flow between your rental income and your homeowner expenses, and you may not want a monthly cash drain on top of your living and RVing expenses.

Houses and Tenants

Finances aside, the thing that keeps most people from leasing their house is the fear that the tenants will destroy it and not pay their rent. Before signing over your home to someone else to live in, the best thing you can do is bullet-proof it as best you can. Also, a smaller, simpler house or condo is going to be easier to maintain than a big sprawly house with complex systems and a huge yard.

Perhaps the most surprising thing for me, once I first became a landlord over two decades ago, was to discover the wide range of people who rent and why they do it. The pool of prospective tenants don’t always act like irresponsible children.

People usually rent a home because they are in transition. Younger folks are generally getting their lives together in hopes of buying a house someday. Older folks may be new to the area and looking to buy eventual-bedding, frozen dinners and paper plates while we fix it up and search for new tenants.

Landlord/Tenant Relationship

When it comes to leasing your home, the landlord/tenant relationship can be the key to success. After all, your tenants will be sleeping in your bedroom and will be calling it their own. If you forego a property manager, you have a chance to make a personal connection and create an emotional bond with your tenants, lessening the chance that they will harm the house or skip out on the rent.

We determine the rent we will charge by driving around the neighborhood and calling all the places advertised for rent and taking a few tours. We find tenants by putting a “For Rent” sign in the yard, opening both the garage door and the front door and waiting from dawn to dusk. This makes it super easy for someone driving by to stop and take a quick look. We bus ourselves between tours with cleaning and maintenance. We’ve always managed to find tenants within two weeks even when other rentals in our neighborhood languished.

When a prospective tenant walks in the door, our main objective is to find out why they want to rent our house, for how long, when they want to move in and whether they seem like respectful people who will care for the house and pay on time.

We let them know we are looking for long-term, nonsmokers and would be happiest if they signed a two-year lease. We say “no pets” but have bent the rules for small indoor dogs and cats. During the interview process, usually a casual conversation in the kitchen, we listen to their life story and why they feel our home fits into their plans. We tell them we love our house and want them to care for it in the same manner as we have. We also explain that we depend on their rent to pay our own bills.

Generally, the true deciding factor for us is their enthusiasm for our

“We find tenants by putting a “For Rent” sign in the yard, opening both the garage door and the front door and waiting from dawn to dusk.”

On the other hand, if you own your house outright, you may have a nice little cash income each month. Obviously, the longer you lease your house and pay the mortgage, the smaller the amount you will owe.

Leasing out your home does have income tax ramifications. Each year your rental income and the associated expenses of owning the property must be reported to the IRS. When you sell the property, capital gains taxes may be due. Consult with your tax advisor to make sure you do everything correctly on your tax forms.

Property Management

Property management companies handle every aspect of renting your home, from repairs to collecting rent to finding new tenants. Generally, they take a commission of 10 percent or so of the monthly rent and charge a month’s rent to find new tenants. They pay you the rent less their fees and repairs every month.

I have always chosen to handle everything myself instead. I have always lived at least 1,000 miles from the property I was leasing out. Our current house is in a place we return to every year, so it is naturally on our travel route, and we can easily put our trailer in storage for a week and move back into our home with an air mattress, home. If they aren’t jumping up and down with excitement at the prospect of renting our house, we keep looking.

Leases and Payment Terms

We use simple, standard rental application and lease forms from Staples. I verify employment and that they paid their previous landlord in full on time. I don’t do a credit check but do make sure we have detailed contact info for at least three friends and family in case the tenant vanishes. (That happened to me once long ago.)

We impose a daily penalty of about three percent of the monthly rent for each day the rent is late, and we require a one-month security deposit on the day the lease is signed. This may sound brutal, but these stiff clauses in the lease contract serve as motivators for the tenants and make our priorities vividly clear. Even when we could have imposed these penalties, we chose not to.

Our tenants make arrangements with their bank and our bank to pay us by direct deposit. Sometimes, in the first month or two, there are a few hiccups as the tenants work out the details with their bank, but we’ve found that, as online banking has become the norm, these mishaps now are rare.

Repairs and Maintenance

We have a home warranty with American Home Shield, and we give the tenants the phone number and our contract number. They deduct the service fee from their next month’s rent. Some of our tenants have used the warranty as many as 10 times in the course of their stay, while others have never used it at all.

People that have been homeowners are usually more skilled at handling repairs, and one of the qualities we look for in a tenant is the ability to do minor repair work. We also have a handy friend who lives nearby who has done repairs that were beyond the scope of the home warranty. He has also found new tenants for us when we were too far away to get back and do the job ourselves in a reasonable timeframe. Of course, we pay him well.

We always start the lease with everything in working order, from lightbulbs to a new refrigerator water filter. Generally, lots of bulbs are burned out and the fridge needs a new water filter by the time the tenants move out, but those are tiny items.

In the nine years we have leased out our home while traveling in our RV, we have repaired almost everything. We’ve replaced the fridge, microwave, doorbell, water heater, bedroom carpeting and garage door opener. We’ve repaired the back yard sprinkler system, fixed plumbing problems, changed circuit breakers and removed three satellite dishes from the roof. (Everyone puts in a new one.) We’ve repaired a sewer line, planted flowering bushes and removed four trees. We’ve also painted the interior from top to bottom.

With each tenant rollover, the place gets better, and by now it is far superior to when we lived there ourselves. All of this has not been cheap, but if we multiply our monthly rent by the 107 rent checks we’ve received since we started full-timing, our tenants have paid us handsomely for our minimal outlay.

Bottom Line

If you are preparing to go full-time but are not sure what to do with your house, leasing it out is a viable option. Not only can leasing work well financially, but the property may improve with age. 🏡
We live in an odd time where seasons are blurred and borders erased.

For example, visit the grocery store produce section anytime of year and you can find an abundance of “out of season” items. Tomatoes immediately come to mind. Most of us have reveled in the bliss of a juicy sun-kissed, vine-ripened, fragrant, red, round, robust tomato. In fact, just thinking about it can transport us to another time (and make our mouths water).

Then there are the wintertime supermarket tomatoes. I’ve never eaten cardboard, but I imagine it’s pretty close to these grotesque examples of this beloved summer fruit. They look good on the outside but are a dismal taste on your plate, no matter how much you gussy them up.

I suppose this is one reason I’m so thrilled with summer fruit festivals. Besides getting back to the source, meeting the growers and exploring the many varieties of the festival’s namesake, you get to sample a bit of pure heaven. Fresh, picked-at-its-peak, sweet, sensational specimens—there’s nothing on earth like a taste of local fruit.

To help you on your journey to find some fine fruity fun, here’s a list of five fab fruit festivals for your consideration. Some are renowned while others are still secret. Either way, each one is a tasty event that’ll linger in your food files for many years to come.
If you ask me, a fresh peach is one of the most seductive fruits. First off, it’s beautiful to look at, fragrant and delicate and delicious and inviting. Peaches were originally cultivated in China and were considered a symbol of longevity. In the 16th century, Franciscan monks brought the peach to St. Simons and Cucumber Islands, and the rest is history. Georgia peach season runs for 16 glorious summer weeks, from mid-May to August, and their growers claim theirs are the “sweetest and tastiest peaches grown anywhere in the world.” You can find out for yourself at the Georgia Peach Festival while you enjoy fireworks, a parade and the World’s Largest Peach Cobbler!

“Aledo Rhubarb Festival

June 3-4, 2016 • Aledo, Illinois
www.aledomainstreet.com

All right, I admit it. I snuck this festival in under the guise of “fruit” when everybody knows it’s really classified as a vegetable. But mix it up with some sugar and strawberries, pop it in a crust and bake it until soft and gooey. No matter what you thought of this recipe idea, you’ll call it an amazing fruit pie. Celebrating its 25th year, the two-day Aledo Rhubarb Festival will introduce you to rhubarb in its many forms, including pies that are for sale. They recommend you arrive early, before they sell out, or suffer “rhubarb regret.”

Whether you choose to deliberately take your roadabode to one of these festivals or happen to be in the area at the appointed time, you’re going to fall in love with flavors that can’t be found in the produce aisle.”
Evanne is sure she got the wanderlust bug from her grandparents who traveled the U.S. in their city bus conversion in the 1940s as what we now call “work-campers.” In 2000 she and her husband, Ray, set off on their own adventure, affectionately called Operation Sunshine, from hip-but-rainy Portland, Oregon, in search of a sunny place to settle down. Fifteen-plus years later, they’re still roaming the country, sharing interesting destinations and cooking up delicious RV kitchen recipes in their popular RV TV series, RVCookingShow.com.

WATERMELON THUMP

June 23–25, 2016 • Luling, Texas
www.watermelonthump.com

You know it’s not one to be missed when it’s venerated in the huge and heavy National Geographic Food Journeys of a Lifetime coffee table tome. This one ranks as one of the “Top Ten Unusual Food and Drink Festivals” in the world. Here you can see the Watermelon Thump Queen on her watermelon parade float. You can also compete for the $500 seed-spitting prize and see how close you can come to last year’s 55-feet, 6-inch winning “spit,” and marvel at the gigantic watermelon specimens before tasting your fill of the fresh summer fruit.

NATIONAL CHERRY FESTIVAL

July 2–9, 2016 • Traverse City, Michigan
www.cherryfestival.org

Celebrating its 90th anniversary, the National Cherry Festival, along the shores of beautiful Lake Michigan in Traverse City, is an eight-day cherry extravaganza that the New York Times recommends as one of the places “foodies should go in 2016.” Sweet cherries, tart cherries, cherries in liqueur, cherry queens, cherry concerts and cherry cook-offs are all offered at this sweet-as-cherry-pie festival.

OREGON BERRY FESTIVAL

July 15–16, 2016 • Portland, Oregon
www.oregonberryfestival.com

While I was tempted to include Montana’s Huckleberry Festival (August 12–14, 2016), the Machias (Maine) Wild Blueberry Festival (August 19–21, 2016), or even the Bremerton (Washington) Blackberry Festival (September 3–5, 2016), I went with the Oregon Berry Festival taking place in a city I love—Portland.

What’s wonderful about this two-day festival is that it celebrates the wide variety of berries grown in the area. Attendees can try good old standby berries such as raspberries, strawberries, blackberries and blueberries, but can also sample marionberries, ollalieberries and loganberries. Looking for boutique fruit brandies, vinegars or maybe black raspberry and ham ice cream? You’ll find everything “berry” at this festival.

KENDALL-JACKSON HEIRLOOM TOMATO FESTIVAL

September 24, 2016 • Fulton, California
www.kj.com/visit-tomato-festival

In case you were unaware, tomatoes are technically a fruit! And you’d be missing a fruit-tastic event by passing up this tomato festival if you are anywhere near the area. Offering more than 150 varieties of odd-colored, funny-shaped, intensely flavored heirloom tomatoes, the Kendall-Jackson Heirloom Tomato Festival is not your ordinary, every-day tomato fest. Held at the gorgeous Kendall-Jackson Wine Center, among their beautiful walnut groves in California’s storied Napa Valley, this well-heeled gathering attracts top-shelf foodies, established and up-and-coming chefs, terrific food and wine pairings, live music, seminars and garden tours. Tickets are pricey and often sell out. If this is up your tomato alley, check their Website and get your tickets today.

Are we fruit-looped?

It’s said many of us will do just about anything for love, but how about the love of fruit? Whether you choose to deliberately take your roadabode to one of these festivals or happen to be in the area at the appointed time, you’re going to fall in love with flavors that can’t be found in the produce aisle. And be sure to go a little crazy tasting some newfangled flavors. You won’t regret it. Bon appétit!

National Park Service Celebrates 100 Years
The National Park Service (NPS) is celebrating its centennial birthday, turning 100 years old August 25, 2016. The parks will have special activities planned for this year, so be sure to include the national parks system in your travel plans. Check out the NPS Website at www.nps.gov to see which parks will be in your area of travel, then check with the specific park to see what special activity they have planned. The NPS is asking you to share your experience after visiting a park at www.findyourpark.com.

The individual parks have planned activities showcasing the story and history of their park, so make plans to include visits to several national parks this year.

Slide-out Toppers and Awnings
The March 2016 American RVer show is all about slide-out toppers and awnings. Chris Throgmartin, owner of Stone Vos in Brooksville, Florida, talks to Jim about determining when to replace slide toppers and what you need to know to make an intelligent decision on which material to use. They even discuss the type of thread that should be used by a topper manufacturer. To see the process of replacing slide toppers, see the January 2015 American RVer show.

AmericanRVer.com provides RVers with information, entertainment and RV-specific tips. The webisodes can be viewed at no cost and average about 20 minutes in length. The shows stream though your computer, iPad, Smart Phone or eBook Reader. Viewers may subscribe to the monthly feed though Apple’s iTunes Store or watch the shows in high definition, with full-screen video, at www.VIMEO.com. Search for “American RVer.” You can also watch the shows on the AmericanRVer Website.

When you arrive in a new campsite, you check in, set up your RV, walk your dog, eat, unwind and maybe have a cold drink. What do you do next?

If you’re like my husband, Bob, and me, you’ll want to explore the area. We like to explore by walking, or “volksmarching,” with the American Volkssport Association (AVA), a nationwide personal fitness and recreation club. Although we enjoy their noncompetitive walking, the club also offers hikes, bike rides and swimming.
What is Volksmarching?
Volksmarching is, literally, “the walk of the people.” Volkssporting events started in Germany in 1968 after a local running group became too competitive. Many unfit individuals wanted to win the awards, but they over-stressed themselves and some were injured or had cardiovascular collapse. A separate organization, the Internationaler Volkssportverband (IVV), was formed to eliminate time restrictions on the sporting events.

In 1976, volkssporting came to the U.S., and the American Volkssport Association was established. This educational, nonprofit 501(c)3 corporation is dedicated to promoting fun, fitness and friendship.

Year-round Event (YRE)
Volksmarching events take place throughout the year all around the U.S. One type of walk, the year-round event, is one you can do anytime. For YREs, locations are provided online at www.AVA.org. You go to a start box, sign in to a logbook, receive a start number, pick up a map, fill out a start card and begin your walk. The start point can be at various locations such as a chamber of commerce, hotel, restaurant or state park.

Trails are laid out by local clubs with easy-to-follow directions or maps provided at the start point. Ratings of 1 (easy) to 5 (most difficult) are given to trails. The designated start point is open for several hours to allow you to begin the Volksmarching adventure at your leisure. Along the route, you may need to answer checkpoint questions and write the answers on your start card. When you’re finished, you deposit your completed start card and a $3 fee in a locked box at the start area, or take an addressed envelope from the box and mail it to the local club. You can stamp your AVA books if you walk for credit, and go on about your day. Historic and scenic sites are selected for your enjoyment.

Traditional Sponsored Event
Another type of walk is the traditional sponsored event. A Volkssport club maps out a route, staffs the registration, start and end tables and usually provides checkpoints along the way where your start card is stamped and water is provided. Sponsored walks may be in conjunction with local festivals or fairs and may include admission to the festivities. For example, the city of New Braunfels, Texas, has Wurstfest in early November, which is similar to Oktoberfest in Germany. The NB-Marsch-und Wandergruppe sponsors a walk-event that includes two admission tickets to Wurstfest, which you can enjoy after the walk.

Celebrating 40 Years
This year (2016) is special for U.S. Volkmarchers as it is the 40th anniversary of the AVA. A walking weekend is planned for June 10–12, 2016, in Fredericksburg, Texas. Located in the scenic Texas Hill Country, Fredericksburg is the location of the original 1976 Volksmarches in the U.S. Four walks, a 25K bike ride and a 300-meter swim will be available on the anniversary weekend. Further information on all anniversary events is available at www.ava.org, under the “events” tab.

Our Walk Adventures
My love of Volksmarching began in Oregon in 1997. The Portland Oregonian newspaper’s events calendar had a description of an upcoming walk, hosted by a local club, through blooming iris fields and along country roads. I conscripted my sister to join me and we had a wonderful walk experience. We were warmly welcomed by the club sponsoring the event and, for $5, received a “New Walker Packet,” which had information about Volksporting, a coupon for a free walk and flyers about upcoming walks. I was hooked.

Over the years, I’ve walked alone, or with friends and relatives, on 5K and 10K walks in forests, parks, cities and flower fields. I’ve also walked along rivers, through festivals, in historical areas, by state capitols and even enjoyed Christmas-light walks.

Volksmarching has awards you can earn by completing special program books. I had recently purchased special program books to visit all 50 states and 51 capitals. For our trip, we marked a route in which we would visit a number of the central state capitols. As we traveled, we made it a point to complete capital Volksmarches along the way. State capitals are treasures to be explored. Each one is unique and has special points of interest, with beautiful artwork, history displays, museums, tours to the capitol domes, beautiful grounds, fountains and much more.

Earn Pins and Badges
Badges and pins can be earned for events you complete. I have been a member of the AVA for 19 years and have earned badges and pins for the number of events and number of kilometers I have walked or hiked. Special program pins and patches can also be earned. In 2014, I earned The Centurion Award for completing 100 walks in one year.

Volksmarching is an excellent form of exercise for RVers. You not only get your body in motion in a non-competitive way, you also see beautiful and unique sites.

Bob and I hope to see you out walking along our travels.

The AVA is headquartered at 1001 Pat Booker Rd., #101, Universal City, TX 78148. You can reach the AVA by phone at 210-659-2122.

In 2011, due to budget cuts, Bob and Susan Alton both lost their jobs in Honolulu, Hawaii, within five days of each other. They moved to the mainland, bought an RV and live life on the road as full-time RVers. They live in their fifth-wheel trailer in an RV park in San Antonio, Texas, with their cats, Bowie and Sunnie. Bob works as an accountant and Susan works on the office team in an RV park. Susan has been a Volksmarcher for 19 years and is publicity chair for the Randolph Roadrunners Volksmarch Club. Time and time again, I am asked the question, “What is the required amount of time I need to stay in my new state to change my domicile?”

Forgive me for sounding like a lawyer, but it depends. Know one thing: Physical presence alone is not sufficient to establish a new domicile. To determine whether an individual sufficiently established domicile, a court will look at both physical presence and one’s intent to acquire a new domicile. It is not a question of the quantity of time, but rather a question of the quality of time spent in your new state.

Perito v. Perito1 is the divorce case of Ruth and Tom Perito after a 25-year marriage. During the entire length of their marriage, the couple lived in New York. Ruth led for divorce in New York but the New York court dismissed the case—finding that Ruth did not satisfy the requirements of domicile. After her case was dismissed in New York, Ruth spoke with attorneys from Nevada and Alaska. Ruth went to Alaska with her friend, bringing some belongings but leaving others in New York. She did not know anyone in Alaska except the attorney she called.

Once they arrived, Ruth and her friend walked around Anchorage and Ruth liked what she saw. Ruth told her friend that she “felt sure this was the place she wanted to be.” The next day, she filed for divorce in Alaska. Ruth then went about renting an apartment month-to-month, found a job, registered to vote and obtained an Alaska driver license.

Now, Tom had never been to Alaska. Tom led a motion to dismiss the case on the basis that Ruth was not an Alaska resident when she led the case. The Supreme Court of Alaska concluded that Ruth’s case did not have to be dismissed because Ruth satisfied domicile requirements. She had the presence and the intent to remain permanently in Alaska and, therefore, she was an Alaska resident.

The lower court based its decision on the testimony of Ruth and her friend, Lois. Ruth testified that she decided to stay in Alaska the day she arrived because she was impressed by the city and the friendly people. She felt strongly that Alaska was a place where she could live, work and be happy. Ruth also testified that she intended to remain in Alaska indefinitely. Lois testified that she heard Ruth express the same sentiment.

Tom contended that other evidence should have persuaded the court to find that Ruth was not a resident of Alaska. Tom pointed to the fact that Ruth did not quit her job in New York when she came to Alaska, but rather took a one-year leave. He also pointed out that, at the time Ruth filed the case (one day after her arrival), she maintained two bank accounts in New York, a safe deposit box, owned two cars and a boat in New York and had a close relationship with her parents who lived there.

The Alaska Supreme Court noted that within a few months of her move to Alaska, Ruth closed the accounts, emptied the safe deposit box, transferred the cars to her daughters and made a trip to New York to visit her family. She also obtained a library card, check cashing card at a local supermarket and applied for credit cards at two local department stores. While these actions occurred after Ruth filed her case, these actions “could have been relevant if they helped the judge shed light on or interpret Ruth’s subjective intent on the date she filed” her case.

Ruth had only been in Alaska one day before she filed her case. She formed her intent to make Alaska her home on her walk the day she arrived. Note that the court looked closely at her later actions, which followed up on her intent to remain permanently in Alaska. The actions she took after changing her domicile served to add credibility to her testimony. If she had returned to New York or failed to close her accounts and conclude her life in New York, would a judge have believed her testimony?

Remember Ruth’s story; regardless of the length of time you are in your new state, clearly form your intent and then take actions to create manifestations of your intent.

Summer is here and what better way to celebrate than with ice cream.

Chances are, if you are spending time in a state where the weather is warm, you will be more than happy to find ways to keep the kids cool while still letting them enjoy the sunshine.

Making the following ice-cream-in-a-bag recipe is a fun, easy way to keep kids entertained. Take them outside to complete the activity and make a game of it. And, if you’re a kid at heart like me, you’ll have as much fun as they do and get to enjoy a sweet treat.

ICE CREAM IN A BAG

Ingredients

- ½ cup half-and-half
- ½ tsp vanilla
- 1 Tbsp sugar
- 2 sandwich Ziploc bags
- 1 gallon Ziploc bag
- 3 cups crushed ice
- 1/3 cup rock salt

- Mix the first three ingredients together in one of the sandwich Ziploc bags. Squeeze any air out as you seal it, then place inside the second sandwich Ziploc bag and seal.
- Place the ice in the gallon Ziploc bag and mix with rock salt. Then place the sandwich bags with the ice-cream mixture in the middle.
- Get moving. Let the kids run free and have them squeeze and shake the bag for five to 10 minutes.
- Once the ice cream is formed, grab a spoon and enjoy it right out of the bag.

National Wildlife Refuges
Fee-free Days for 2016

Get outside and enjoy some of the country’s most magical places. America’s national wildlife refuges will offer free admission on these days in 2016:

September 24
National Public Lands Day

October 9
First Sunday of National Wildlife Refuge Week

November 11
Veterans Day

The free holidays are scheduled each year to encourage Americans to visit their public lands and enjoy firsthand the natural and cultural experiences they have to offer.
National wildlife refuges are managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, part of the Department of the Interior. There's at least one national wildlife refuge in every state, and one within an hour's drive of most major metropolitan areas.

SKP Co-Ops (Escapes Members Only)

The plus symbol (+) is used to indicate “plus electric.” Additional charges may apply for 50-amp electric, pull-thru and additional occupants.

Prices are subject to change without notice. Contact parks for hours of operation and to verify rental fees before arrival.

Receiving mail at Escapes Parks: Route your mail to General Delivery, City, State and Zip Code. Verify zip code by calling 800-275-8777.

Availability of rental spaces at SKP Co-Ops depends on members putting their lots into a rental pool while they travel. During the popular season, there may be few spaces for rent. Call in advance to check the availability of rental sites.

Lease Lots at SKP Co-Ops

Only Escapées members may purchase an SKP Co-Op membership (when one is available), and that membership entitles them to use a specified lot until they are deceased or sell the membership back to the corporation. Each SKP Co-Op sets its own rules and is self-governing with a board of directors elected by the members. Members share in the financial responsibilities of the SKP Co-Op. Operating expenses are shared equally among the membership by way of an annual maintenance fee. Most SKP Co-Op sites have buildings and other improvements that may add several thousand dollars to the buy-in price. Most also have a waiting list. Call individual parks for more information.

Air Conditioner
Q. We have a 2001 Sunnybrook 27FKS that is stored inside and is in like-new condition. Last summer, when arriving at campsites with the temperature above 80 degrees, I would turn the thermostat down to 73 degrees and turn on the A/C. The fan came on immediately, but the compressor took five to 15 minutes to come on. After running about five minutes, the compressor turned off. Then it took another five to 15 minutes before the compressor came on again. Sometimes it takes hours to cool down the trailer. When the compressor is working, the air flow is cool. Where do I start looking for the problem?

Norman

A. There are a number of things that can cause this problem. If the air filters or the evaporator coil are clogged, the reduced airflow can cause the compressor to only run for a short period before it cycles off. It is easy to check. If the airflow is fine, then something in the controls is causing the short cycle-time.

Some air conditioners have an interior brain board that controls the compressor and fan. I have seen them located in a small metal box in the air passage, usually accessible if you remove the interior shroud. This board may be defective. It could also be a problem either with the compressor itself, or the entire refrigeration system, like a restricted passage or orifice, or from the compressor protection circuit not working properly. It could also be a bad start capacitor. If visual inspection of the unit for air flow restrictions doesn’t turn up anything, you’ll most likely need to have the unit serviced by a HVAC technician, as most of the other problems are not something the average owner is equipped to diagnose or repair.

Water Leaks
Q. I have a 2008 toy hauler I purchased new in 2009. When the water heater is on, I have a leak at the shower valve connection to the Pex pipe. I replaced the rubber washer/cone on the “hot” hose, and the leak stopped for a while. A few months later, I heard a noise under the kitchen sink and found the “cold” hose leaking when the heater was on. I replaced its washer and replaced the limit switch on the water heater (Suburban), and it resolved the problem again for a while. The relief valve leaks like the manual says it should, and I also bleed the system to put an air chamber in the tank as the manual says to do. The manual does not tell you which valve (hot or cold) to open to let air into the system, nor when the water is hot. I never had an issue until a few months ago. I live in Los Angeles, California, so it doesn’t get too cold here to freeze.

Steve

A. If you experience these leaks only when the water heater is heating up, it usually indicates that the air space at the top of the water-heater tank has been lost. When the water is heated, it expands, and if there is not an air pocket in the tank, the pressure in your plumbing system can get really high. Usually, you can re-establish that air space by partially draining the water heater and then allowing it to refill by opening a hot-water faucet. You can also open a faucet briefly to relieve the pressure while the tank is heating up. Unfortunately, that air pocket often seems to disappear over time. I have found that the best option is to add a small air bladder expansion tank to your plumbing system. These small tanks, usually only one or two gallons in capacity, are used with reverse-osmosis water systems and residential water heaters in some locales, and are easy to plumb into your fresh-water piping. The tank can be connected anywhere in the system; usually teeing it into one of the cold water lines is fine. Since it is small, it can be placed almost anywhere such as under a sink or in a compartment. The tank will absorb any pressure changes, and it has the added benefit of smoothing out your water flow when using the 12V water pump. I’ve provided a description on my Website and you can find it at: www.marxrv.com/hints.htm#expansion.

Summer Storage
Q. I have a 34-foot Airstream that I am planning to leave at my RV site in Casa Grande, Arizona, for the summer. Do you have any suggestions for summer storage in the desert heat? We have tinted windows and were told not to use aluminum insulation as it will get too hot and break the windows.

Bob

A. You won’t have trouble with mildew or pipes freezing with storing an RV in the summer heat. The big problem is heat buildup inside the RV. You need to remove all items that may be damaged by heat, including laptops or sensitive electronics, food or liquids of any kind, toiletries and cleaning products and photographs. Basically, anything that can melt or is sensitive to the heat needs to be removed.

Clean and vacuum the interior. Drain all tanks and leave the dump valves closed. Check tire pressures and cover the tires. Check electrolyte levels and disconnect the batteries. If power is available, put a small trickle charger on them.

I’m not a fan of foil on windows, but you might consider covering all windows on the inside with silver bubble-wrap-type insulation. This will prevent sun damage to drapes and blinds and also add a small amount of insulation. An alternative might be a white breathable RV cover over the entire rig.

It is necessary to provide for some air flow. I suggest leaving a roof vent open about an inch and opening a window slightly on the opposite end of the RV.

Some folks leave several five-gallon buckets of water inside to help provide a little humidity. ☁️

Fifth-wheel Slide
Q. We have a 35-foot fifth-wheel, and the kitchen-side slide does not close evenly. Does it need adjusting? Also, it has made a tear in the upper corner gel coat that we have had to fix twice.

Mary Kay and Markel

A. Most RV slides have some adjustability. If yours is not going in and out evenly, it may either need adjustment or the guides and/or rollers may be worn or damaged. It will only get worse, so it would be best to have a dealer or repair shop take a look at it. Most RV service facilities are used to working on slides, so you don’t necessarily have to take it back to a dealer if there isn’t one handy. Although it is technically possible to adjust a slide mechanism yourself, it does require specialized skills and an understanding of mechanics. It is usually beyond what a typical RV do-it-yourselfer is qualified to do. Kitchen slides are more complex due to the requirement to route and manage plumbing and utility lines as the slide moves, so I suggest you have a shop look at it.

Engine Tuners and Warranty

The article, “Engine Tuners,” in the March/April issue was excellent; however, I have a question. How do you modify a vehicle without voiding the warranty? I hear comments like “return it to stock” before servicing, but my bet is that the vehicle’s computer memory somehow knows when it goes from program “A” to program “B,” then back to “A.”

James, this is what the manufacturer told me when I asked their customer service how installing their tuner would affect our truck warranty: “Any aftermarket products added to a vehicle don’t void the warranty unless the dealer can prove a part failed because of that aftermarket part. The consumer is protected by the Magnuson Moss Act, but most customers get scared away because dealers tell customers that our products will void the warranty. The other way dealers try to get around this law is with new truck sales. When a customer buys a new truck, the dealer puts in the contract that if they add any “unauthorized products,” meaning the dealer didn’t approve it as okay, then they are voiding their warranty on the truck.” I hope you find this helpful.

Refrigerator Repair

Paul and Mao Unmack, we cannot thank you guys enough for coming to Saguaro SKP Co-Op and bringing us the news of your ARPrv Control unit (page 69) and for what it does to prevent RV fires. More importantly, you took the time to find out what was wrong with our Norcold refrigerator, and you repaired it. It is now cooling to approximately 38 degrees, and we have not seen that temperature in the refrigerator for some time. We truly appreciate your taking the time to help us. We will be spreading the word about your product and your expertise.

Book Review Correction

The review of The Wonder of It All states that 2016 is the 100th anniversary of the park service “inaugurated by Teddy Roosevelt.” It was President Woodrow Wilson, not Theodore Roosevelt, who signed the bill establishing the National Park Service.

It is a common misconception that Theodore Roosevelt, president from 1901 to 1908, is responsible for starting our national parks. He did inaugurate the National Forest Service, established many bird and wildlife refuges and added five national parks and 18 national monuments. He is often referred to as our “conservationist president.” But the parks began long before Roosevelt, and the park service came after his administration ended.

Our first national park, also the world’s first national park, was Yellowstone, which was signed into law on March 1, 1872, by President Ulysses S Grant. Other parks followed. While these were under the Dept. of Interior, there were no park services and no system in place for running them. For many years, the military filled that role, doing a rather good job of it. But let’s face it, running parks is not the mission of the Army or its cavalry units.

That changed on August 25, 1916, when President Wilson signed a bill authorizing the creation of the National Park Service (NPS). This year, our parks and national monuments will be celebrated, particularly on that date.

Stephen Tyng Mather wrote and lobbied for the bill, and later became our first Director of National Parks. Many Escpees have seen plaques with his likeness and brief biography in our parks. Independently wealthy, it was his love of the parks and not a desire for a paying job, that led to his involvement.

Although I wanted to correct the information in the “From the Bookshelf” column, the book itself looks like a fun read.

 RV Tire Pressure Safety **

Last year, we experienced a blowout on our 30-foot Montana fifth-wheel trailer. It was not only a delay and inconvenience, it also resulted in a costly repair. This incident could have been prevented if we would have had a TPMS (tire pressure monitoring system) in place.

The Firestone recall in the late 1990s (which was linked to more than 100 deaths from rollovers following tire-tread separation) pushed the U.S. Congress to legislate the TREAD Act. This act mandated the use of a suitable TPMS technology in all light motor vehicles (under 10,000 pounds), to help alert drivers of under-inflation events. The act affects all light-motor vehicles sold after September 1, 2007; however, RVs, heavy trucks and other commercial vehicles are exempt.

In the U.S., as of 2008, and in the European Union, as of November 1, 2012, all new passenger-car models (M1) released must be equipped with a TPMS. By November 1, 2014, all new passenger cars sold in the European Union must be equipped with TPMS. For N1 vehicles, TPMS are not mandatory, but if a TPMS is fitted, it must comply with the regulation. Again, RVs are exempt from the requirements of this safety feature.

Taking the stand of RV manufacturers, Rick Deisler, Keystone RV Company Director of Customer Service, states, “We are not aware of any action being taken to include towable recreational vehicles (travel trailers and fifth-wheels) in the TPMS requirement. As a company, we have looked at different systems, but, to this point, have not found one to be satisfactory for our needs, which are different from a car/truck. While there is no requirement, we also respond to dealer and customers’ input/demand for features. At this time, we have not received enough to offer this as an option or standard, but we will continue to look for a product that makes sense for our situation for when we do.”

I did offer several of my considerations as to reasons RV manufacturers should take a lead role in providing TPMS for their customers’ safety, even as an optional equipment choice. After all, if both the European Union and the U.S. governments were convinced of the safety of these devices enough to legislate and regulate them for cars, why should manufacturers of RVs not take the lead for the safety of RVers? This could prevent the need for the government to regulate it later.

Even if the manufacturers do not offer TPMS, RVers can request and make optional aftermarket upgrades to their equipment for their own safety concerns.

There are a number of TPMS manufacturers offering systems for your consideration at a wide price range.

Doran alone has over 300,000 tire pressure sensors monitoring wheels on the road.

Todd Thornicroft national sales manager for Doran Manufacturing, states: “Our external, valve-stem mounted sensors also monitor both pressure and temperature. They also contain a lithium-ion battery. Outside of the programming functionality, the benefit to the Doran system, with external sensors, is two-fold:

1. Initial Installation—There is typically no need to have an RV dealer or tire dealer complete the installation due to internal sensors. This saves the customer money up front.
2. System Maintenance/Replace Sensors—In under five minutes, an RV owner can delete the ID code of the old sensor, reprogram the new sensor and receive live tire pressure information from the driver’s seat. There is virtually no down time and no need for a service appointment.”

Take into consideration your full needs (the number of wheels you will need to monitor) before purchasing your system. A standard motorhome has six wheels, while your towed vehicle, boat or trailer may also need coverage of its additional two or more wheels. There are TPMS models to cover up to 20 or more wheels. Your newer car has its own factory TPMS, and you should not disengage that system as there can be penalties. As you disengage each towed item, you will need to adjust your monitor to reflect the changes each time. Make sure your need is real.

Systems at $300 or more are not cheap and, to protect your warranty, they should be purchased just before the installation time. A new TPMS system should be installed each time you replace your tires thereafter. For inside wheel systems, caution should be exercised to make sure your installer has experience in installing TPMS for heavy vehicles and can meet the needs of your specific vehicle.

The easiest to change are valve-stem systems, which come in generally two types: caps and flow-through. Make sure you follow the installation manual and programming instructions for whatever system you purchase and understand their warranty and battery life. Look for systems that have a long-proven history of use such as Doran, Hawk-Head, Tire Protector, Tire Tracker and TST. These systems should meet your needs, but feel free to explore other brands as there are many. I strongly recommend that you examine brands and talk with real representatives before making your final decision.

Since we purchased Meriwether (our RV), my wife, Brittany, and I have been thinking about preventative maintenance for the roof. We don’t have any known leaks, but we know that, if we don’t perform preventative maintenance, we will eventually.

I figure, if something is attached to the roof, it means that somewhere there is a connecting hole between the roof and the inside of the RV.

On the roof side, these attached items (vent covers, rear ladder, antenna, etc.) are normally sealed from water intrusion with a self-leveling lap sealant. This sealant doesn’t last forever, and, eventually, any area previously sealed will develop cracks due to the elements.

Remember, it’s a lot easier and cheaper to do your own annual RV roof maintenance than it is to wait until you have water coming in through the roof.

I’m pretty much clueless when it comes to anything handyman-ish or mechanical, but surprisingly, this annual RV roof maintenance was a breeze. So, if you are one of those folks who have been thinking that you’d rather pay someone to do this task for you, think again.

Note: This article deals specifically with the sealing of items attached to a fiberglass roof. If your roof is made of another material, you’ll need to research your specific roof type. Some sealants and chemicals are not recommended for all roof types.

Article and photos by Eric Highland #124763

Continued...
STEP 1: TAKE A LOOK
A. The first thing you want to do is inspect your roof. Make sure you have a safety observer such as your partner or a neighbor. Items to bring are a water bottle, Sharpie pen and a small camera (most cell phones have a camera).

B. Once you’re on the roof, start at the back and work your way toward the front of the coach. Take a look at everything that has been previously sealed by lap sealant, and do a close examination for any cracks. These could range from hairline cracks to prominent, major crevices.

C. The obvious cracks you don’t need to mark, but mark any hairline cracks with your sharpie pen so you don’t miss them when you come up to do the work. You may want to take some photos to document your work along the way.

D. Check specifically around the areas where the ladder attaches to the roof and where the vents for the tanks and the shower attach, as these areas tend to crack more readily. Once you’re at the front of the coach, do a second sweep while on your way back to the ladder and double-check to see if you may have missed something. Note: Do not use lap-sealant on skylights. There is a specific product for them.

To get a rough idea of how many tubes of lap sealant you’ll need to do the roof, you’ll use about one tube for every four areas of repair. Drink some water and head back down to grab your tools and supplies for the job.

STEP 2: GATHER TOOLS AND SUPPLIES
You don’t need your entire toolbox for this job. I recommend wearing an old pair of work jeans, as the lap sealant can be pretty sticky stuff. Here is a short list of the items you’ll need:
- 1 caulk gun
- 1–2 tubes of sealant (I used Dicor self-leveling lap sealant)
- 1 pair of standard pliers
- 2 adjustable wrenches
- 1 old toothbrush
- 1 can or bottle of mineral spirits
- 1 roll of putty tape
- 2–4 pairs of disposable nitrile gloves
- 1 roll of paper towels
- 1 bundle of rags
- 1 disposable trash bag

That’s it. Now that you have all the tools, let’s get to the job itself.

STEP 3: GET CLEAN
Again, I suggest you start at the back of the coach and work your way forward. You probably noticed when you first found items that were previously sealed with lap sealant that the weather tends to blacken the old sealant. This is actually dirt and grime, and it needs to be cleaned off so the new sealant will stick.

You don’t need to remove the old lap sealant. You’re only going to touch up the areas that have cracks. If you want to remove the old sealant, you can, but Dicor lap sealant is designed to be put on in layers.

The next step is to put on your disposable nitrile gloves. Wipe down all areas where you’re going to apply sealant, using the mineral spirits and a rag. You’ll find it’s easier to use a paper towel or the old toothbrush for the hard-to-reach areas, so go ahead and use those as needed.

Once you’ve wiped down the old lap sealant with the mineral spirits and some muscle, you’ll find they become white again. These areas need to dry completely before applying sealant, so move on to the next area to clean.

The reason you want to do all of the cleaning first is, once you’ve opened up the tube of lap sealant, you’ll need to use it all right away. If you have to pause to clean off another section, it can be a messy mistake. By working from the back to the front of the coach, by the time you are done wiping down the areas on the front of the coach, the back will be dry enough for you to begin the sealing process.

STEP 4: GET SEALED

Now that all your surfaces are clean, break out your caulking gun and load it with your self-leveling lap sealant. Make sure you are in a well-ventilated area—outside is good. The lap sealant can make you a little dizzy, which is unsafe when you are on a roof. Performing this job outside will help tremendously.

Now go to the areas you noticed or marked earlier, again starting at the back of the coach, and apply the sealant liberally. You don’t need to worry about making it look pretty. It’s on the roof and, unless your friends have a helicopter, they’ll probably never see how hard you worked anyway.

The important thing here is to make sure you fill in all of the cracks, from the hairline ones to the major crevices. Because the sealant is self-leveling, it will seep into the cracks and fill them up on its own.

What you should see when you are done is a nice white layer of lap sealant that has no visible cracks or openings. On your way back to the ladder, double-check all of your new sealant and make sure you don’t see any cracks and that you didn’t miss any spots you originally marked.

That’s it. You’re done! It took me about three hours to do my roof maintenance. Now, go on and enjoy an ice-cold beverage and celebrate knowing you’ve saved yourself enough in repair costs for that new retractable ladder you’ve been pining for.

Final Thoughts

It is important to not use this self-leveling lap sealant on vertical surfaces as it only works on horizontal surfaces. Also, don’t use it on skylights. Lastly, set yourself a reminder to check the roof again in about six months. It should still be fine, but it’s good to check.

Dear Curious,

Mindfulness is the key to enjoying life as it happens. Often, we find ourselves living in the past or in the future. We may spend time reminiscing about how things were when our life was a certain way, such as, when my kids were little, when my spouse was with me, etc. Or, perhaps we live for the occurrence of certain events: when the kids come to visit, when we can retire, after we move. We can become stuck in this pattern and fail to see the love, beauty and pleasure that is right in front of us at any moment. For example: the love of a good friend, the beauty of today’s sunset or the companionship available right now. If we continue in this pattern, we will also miss future events for which we are pining, while we still focus on the future or the past. Focusing on living in the present moment and being aware of your here and now is what mindfulness is all about.

Here are a few suggestions to help cultivate a mindful experience. It is not difficult, but it does take practice and focus.

Question: I hear all this talk about mindfulness, but I really don’t understand what it means, or how it can help. Can you explain?

Curious
Focus on the Here and Now
This is the key and the essence of mindfulness. I don’t mean focus in the general sense, as in “I know where I am and who I am with,” but in the specific detail of your present circumstances. It has been described as paying attention to the present moment without judgment as if your life depended on it. For example:

If you are spending time with family, bring yourself back to where you are and who you are with: I am sitting with my daughter and we are talking about her job. Focus on what she is saying about her work. Does she seem to enjoy it? Does she find it fulfilling? What is she actually telling you about it? What is she not saying? What does her body language tell you? What is her tone of voice? Be fully present for the entire conversation with her.

When you are alone, focus intensely on your own feelings. How does your body feel as you sit in the chair? Are you comfortable? Do you find any aches or tension anywhere in your body? Where does that come from? How is the air around you? Is it cool, warm or stifling? Is there a breeze? Can you smell anything—perhaps the lovely scent of a flower from your garden, or the wonderful meal you had for dinner tonight? Can you hear any sounds? If so, are the sounds pleasing or annoying?

Pay attention to the taste and texture of each bite of food when you are eating. How does it feel in your mouth? Focus on the tastes on your tongue. Are they sweet or salty? Do you begin to feel full as you continue your meal? Many of us wolf down our food while focusing on what we have to do next, failing to enjoy even our favorite foods. What a waste!

How do you feel in general? Are you rested or tired? Are you hungry or sated? What can you do about it?

Leave the Past in the Past
It is good to enjoy wonderful memories of earlier, pleasant times in our lives, but if we spend all of our time there, we fail to enjoy the present. Remember, the present is a gift; that’s why it is called the present. Memories are nice, but don’t dwell on the past or you will lose precious time.

“Focusing on living in the present moment and being aware of your here and now is what mindfulness is all about.”

Leave the Future to the Future
Similarly, don’t spend all of your time focusing on, or worrying about, the future. Many of us have a tendency to spend our time focusing on the future, thinking as we go through our day about what needs to be done tomorrow. Where must I go? What appointments do I have? What do I need from the store? Then we find, as we reach the end of a vacation, holiday or year, that we spent the entire time in the future and failed to enjoy or appreciate any of it. If you find yourself spending all of your time thinking about the future, you may want to set aside a certain time of day for planning, such as with your morning coffee, and leave the rest of the day to the present. By forbidding yourself to plan or focus on the future any other time of day, you will find that you enjoy your current activities more.

Practice Mindfulness
Changing any thinking pattern or habit takes practice. Just as you focus on your planning with your first cup of coffee for the day, you may need to find a time to practice mindfulness. Try devoting 10 minutes to this practice at a specific time each day. Bring your thoughts to where you are and what you are doing. Ask yourself some of the questions posed above. The more you practice, the easier mindfulness will become.

Meditation Can Help
Meditation is practiced in many ways, but simply being present in the here and now is one way to meditate. Spending only five or 10 minutes meditating each day can make you more mindful throughout your day. Closing your eyes and focusing on your breathing can also help to put your mind at peace so you can focus on what you choose.

Be Gentle With Yourself
We are taught from the time we are small to focus and plan for the future. Don’t be too hard on yourself if you find you are slipping back into that old pattern. The longer you practice being in the present, the easier and more automatic it will become. Appreciate the effort and interest you are investing in making this change, and give yourself a pat on the back. You are taking steps to make a difference in your own life.

Many of us find those special times that we have looked forward to, have sped past us faster than the speed of light, and find that we don’t remember much of how we spent our time. Most often it is due to our focus not being on our present moment, and we missed an opportunity to enjoy the time or event that we anticipated. By practicing these few steps on a regular basis, you will find that you remember and enjoy more of your life and times with friends and loved ones. Isn’t that what life is all about?

Give YOURSELF The Gift of CARE

The Creation of CARE
Escapees CARE is unique and the only place of its kind in America. It is a lesson in accomplishment that developed from a dream into the complex facility that it is today.

We offer tours two to three times a week, and it is there that I talk about Kay Peterson’s vision and dream of founding Escapees CARE. To provide more insight into the slogan, “Give Yourself the Gift of CARE,” here is the history of how it all began.

From Outback to Back Home
Kay had already acquired the land for the CARE facility, so funding was her biggest obstacle.

While on a trip to Australia, she learned of the Royal Flying Doctor Service of Australia (RFDS), which was created by the Reverend John Flynn. He was trying to bring health to the outback in 1912 and the only communication was by telegraph. By 1917, he considered new technologies: shortwave radio and aircraft. A year later, he began public speaking and fundraising. By 1928, he had raised sufficient funds to launch RFDS, the world’s first air ambulance service. (The people involved in this service went on to create Qantas Airlines. John Flynn is currently featured on one side of the current Australian $20 note.)

Kay learned from Flynn’s fundraising concepts and she came back to the U.S. to begin fundraising at meetings. To establish CARE, it was going to take a substantial amount of funding for additional land, building materials, equipment, furnishings and the initial 15 campsites. But Kay was a passionate, persuasive speaker and at her first meeting with Escapees members, she came away with the name CARE (Caring Assistance for Retired Escapees) and a box of money.

It wasn’t long before she was breaking ground for the future facility. Many volunteers and generous supporters contributed in other ways, providing work, time and material goods in support of this unique concept in senior care.

Contributions to CARE
Since Kay’s first meeting, our records show Escapees chapters have contributed $392,476. The top three chapters are Chapter 6, at $53,000; Chapter 7, at $44,776; and Chapter 10, at $23,699. Escapees BoF groups have donated over $145,466, with the top three being Boomers, at $38,225; SOLOs, at $33,820; and Escapees Elks, at $25,000. The Escapees parks contributed $54,674, with the largest donation being $25,513 from Rainbow Plantation Rainbow Park, followed by $8,366 from Jojoba Hills SKP Co-Op. Others, such as SKPACRE, WARE, VCRs and Adventure Caravans, have all been significant supporters, as well.

Escapees members have generously donated with monthly bank or credit card contributions, and some even include CARE in their will. All contributions and volunteer time fund CARE’s programs.

Kay’s vision gave us the Gift of CARE. Now Escapees members are giving each other a “gift” of love, help, health, understanding and assistance. So, “Come to CARE to Get Stronger; to Live Longer.”

Within seconds, the fury of the storm was upon us. The first window shattered inches from where I sat in the passenger seat. Glass shards, catapulted by hurricane-like winds, launched across the dashboard and around our feet.

Torrential rain began flooding the cockpit of our four-month-old Winnebago 38Q. My husband, Pete, pulled onto the shoulder behind a line of cars traveling south on I-29 just north of Council Bluffs, Iowa. Like a massive wave crashing onto shore, a menacing shelf cloud engulfed us, causing Pete to be unable to control the RV.

It was late afternoon, June 3, 2014. Having watched the storm brewing to the northwest, we remained naïve to its force. I was fascinated with the sky’s deceptive beauty, hoping to capture a perfect photograph of these immense grey clouds punctuated with a ribbon of turquoise. Fear gripped me, however, when Pete urged me to cut short my phone conversation with my daughter. I knew from his demeanor or he was alarmed—concern I would not convey to my daughter.

We attempted to move mid-coach but were halted when the large window above the sofa exploded. Torrential rain, hail and powerful winds were now buffeting us from two locations. We sought refuge in the step-well behind the passenger seat of the coach. Miraculously, only the outer pane of the dual-pane window in the door shattered.

For 30 agonizing minutes, we cowered there as the storm raged around us. Straight-line winds, later estimated between 85 to 100 mph, repeatedly rocked the 26,000-pound chassis up onto the driver-side wheels as if it were a toy.

The deafening sounds thundered on for what seemed an eternity. Like a relentless predator, wind forced its way through gaps around doors and windows, howling and moaning eerily. Hail, estimated to be baseball-size or larger, pummeled the coach unmercifully. One by one, windows shattered along the passenger side of the coach.

Believing we were experiencing a tornado, I anticipated the RV would be rolled and crushed with us in it, or we would be plucked from its safety as in the Wizard of Oz.

Derecho

What we actually experienced was a derecho, best described as a large cluster of thunderstorms that produce widespread wind damage as a result of curved lines known as bow echoes. In Spanish, derecho means “straight,” and these windstorms typically leave wide, long swaths of damage from straight-line winds ranging from 58 to 100 mph or higher.

Assessing the Damage

Once the hail subsided, we arose to survey the damage. Drenched with rain, we trembled from the cold air and trauma. Pete took photos and videos of the damage: shattered windows, glass embedded in the television screen and water sheeting down walls and from the ceiling. I, however, stood motionless, staring through the windshield in shock.

The storms continued that evening, bringing heavy rain, lightning and hail. Realizing we needed to fully assess the damage, we limped to the nearest hardware store for supplies. Seeking refuge in a gas station with covered pumps, now closed for the night, Pete covered the broken windows with heavy plastic sheeting and Gorilla Tape®. Requiring more than simple, minor warranty work, we canceled our travel plans and rerouted to Forest City, Iowa, home to Winnebago.
Pete drove through the night while I surrendered to my exhaustion. To prevent further damage from rain, Pete climbed onto the roof early the next morning to cover any holes. He lost count at 70. Of those, 20 had completely penetrated the fiberglass roof. Additionally, the roof-mounted satellite dish was now sporting a basketball-sized indentation. Further investigation revealed shattered side mirrors, cracked metal awning shields, numerous cracks in the fiberglass walls and deep depressions in the metal storage compartment doors.

Our insurance company totaled the Rubicon and we found ourselves at Community Chrysler Jeep in Mason City, Iowa, searching for a replacement tow vehicle. Not surprisingly, the Rubicon drew a crowd of salesmen, shaking their heads in astonishment at the size of hail dents. We chatted about the massive destruction this same storm had caused to the Woodhouse dealership in Blair, Nebraska, 10 miles northwest of our storm location, where approximately 4,400 vehicles sustained hail damage.

The coach turned out to be a more time-consuming ordeal. We believed (and hoped) it was totaled. Thankfully, Winnebago completed a thorough appraisal for our insurance company which, unfortunately, took time to complete. The total for visible damages topped $121,000, not including future unforeseen water damage. Our case was transferred to the large loss department, falling in line behind numerous claims from the same storm. Since we travel full-time and our RV is our home, we remained in limbo. After weeks of prodding the insurance agent, the RV was finally totaled. Luckily, when we had purchased our now-destroyed RV four months earlier, Pete purchased total replacement cost insurance, and we were made whole.

Post Disaster
The intensity of that experience and the fears it created remained with me. I kept waiting for the next storm to strike. Each ear-piercing NOAA weather radio alarm sent me into a panic. And every threatening storm that approached found me reliving those life-changing moments in the jaws of the derecho.

Over time, I received help for post-disaster distress, learned more about weather and put storm preparedness items in place to bring us peace of mind.

After her divorce, Patty’s love of travel resulted in solo motorcycle trips. Solo became duo after meeting her partner, Pete Garton. In January 2012, their mutual desire for adventure led to retirement, sale of the house and full-time RVing.
The first series of RV refrigeration articles discussed how the refrigeration process works and the control of the process. This article will explain why it is important to remove the heat from your refrigerator and as you prepare for an outing.

Heat and Your Refrigerator
As I covered in previous articles, heat drives the entire refrigeration process. In addition, heat has to be transferred from inside your refrigerator to the surrounding environment in order to keep the interior cool. So what happens if your refrigerator cannot rid itself of the generated heat? The simple answer is that it will not cool and the heat can heat up in your RV interior. You may even have noticed heat buildup in the cabinet area above your refrigerator. This is great if you want a toaster above your refrigerator, but most folks would rather not have the added heat in their RV.

Installation and Insulation
When the manufacturer builds an RV, the refrigerator should be insulated so that the heat produced at the back of the refrigerator has an exit to the exterior. Often there is no insulation at the top of the refrigerator, which produces a pocket where heat can collect. This pocket of heat can transfer heat to other areas, as well as into the interior of the refrigerator itself. An easy fix to this problem is to pack fiberglass insulation around the sides and top of the refrigerator between the refrigerator cabinet and the surrounding structure, preventing heat transfer. Once you insulate, put a cover over any loose insulation that may fall down and block the cooling unit air flow. As a word of caution, if insulation blocks the air flow in the cooling-unit compartment, the refrigerator will overheat.

RV Refrigerator Ventilation
Now that we have addressed insulating the refrigerator inside its cabinet, we can talk about the two types of cooling-unit venting.
ROOF VENT

The traditional method used for ventilation is a side vent access door at the bottom of the refrigerator and a roof vent at the top (see illustration). This is the best configuration because it allows cool air to be pulled in from the side by air rising up through the cooling unit compartment. The air picks up heat and then exits out the roof vent.

There are two advantages to having the roof vent. One is that a draft is created by what is called the "chimney" or "stack" effect. The second advantage is that the heat is carried up, away from your RV, resulting in a much cooler interior. Roof vent type installations use natural convection, which means that fans are often unnecessary for assisting with ventilation.

SIDE VENT

The side vent method is becoming popular with the manufacturers (see illustration). This type of installation will have two vents on the side of the RV. Some side vent applications are for RVs with slide-outs where roof vents cannot be used. Other manufacturers are adopting side vent refrigerator installations to cut cost and create additional space by avoiding roof penetration that requires sealant to prevent water leaks. As opposed to the roof vent, the side vent reduces the chimney effect that helps carry the heat away. In some cases, wind can stop the convection entirely. As a result, the refrigerators with the side vents tend to fail more often than those with roof vents. The good news is that there are ways to improve venting for either type of vent installation.
Wind and Ventilation
The wind affects the ventilation of your refrigerator, sometimes in a positive manner and at other times in a negative way.

If the wind is blowing in the correct direction, it can force air into the lower side vent, pushing air out the top. The negative issue is when the wind blows past your RV, it can create “eddies” that result in low pressure and stagnation zones for the cooling air (see illustration). The result is that the cooling unit cannot reject its heat, which, in turn, slows down or even stops the refrigeration process. Side vents are more vulnerable to wind stagnation than roof vent applications. I believe this is a contributing factor to why folks with side vent refrigerators tend to have more problems. Our slide-in camper has a roof vent, but the refrigerator is mounted in a manner that results in over-heating when the wind blows.

ARP Control
Ventilation is key to the efficiency of your refrigerator. If it cannot expel its heat, the ammonia in the system remains as a vapor and does not return to the boiler of the cooling unit (discussed in a previous article). As a result, the boiler overheats and stops the fluids within the cooling unit from circulating. The ARP control detects this situation and intervenes by turning off the cooling unit heat source and only restarting the refrigerator when it is safe to do so.

Additional Cooling Fans
As the size of the RV refrigerators increased, manufacturers began installing fans as a standard item. The fans help, but they are mounted in a manner that tends to promote recirculation of the air within the cooling unit compartment. The reason for the recirculation is that the fans are mounted between the vents rather than at the vents. In addition, the method for controlling the fans is a mechanical snap switch that has a tendency to fail.

As a result of the above conditions, ARP control designed a precision fan controller that only turns on the fans when needed. Rather than a mechanical snap switch to activate the fans, the ARP fan control uses a temperature sensor. The temperature at which the fan turns on can be adjusted within a range of 90°F to 140°F. We provide blower-type fans that are quiet, move a lot of air and mount at the vent where they can suck in cool air, which forces out the hot air. For side vent applications, we recommend mounting a second fan to suck out the hot air that accumulates at the top of the refrigerator compartment. A further benefit of mounting a blower at the top vent is that it will push the hot air from the refrigerator away from the RV, keeping the slide-out and RV interior cooler.

“Another method to increase efficiency is to mount 12V computer-type CPU fans inside the refrigerator. Mount the fans so they can blow on the cooling fins and circulate the air inside the refrigerator.”

She designed biodiesel plants and worked for a government-funded research and development organization. Paul and Mao run the entire ARP control business while taking on engineering consulting gigs.

Preparing For a Trip
Often I am asked how one should prepare for a road trip if the refrigerator has been off. It is stated that one should start the refrigerator a day before the trip, but I am an engineer and thus I am all about efficiency. Yes, the absorption refrigeration process takes a long time to initiate if there is nothing in the refrigerator and the refrigerator is warm.

Because we do not like eating out too much, Mao and I will cook food and freeze it in our household refrigerator for our first week on the road. I will start the RV refrigerator a few hours before we leave, or the night before if we are leaving early in the morning, and place the frozen enchiladas and other goodies in the refrigerator to thaw out. By placing frozen food in the refrigerated space, the refrigerator drops in temperature within an hour or so. We receive the benefit of starting with a full LP tank and a cold beverage and enchiladas the first night out on the road.

There are many ways to travel, but the one we are probably most familiar with is by RV. In this column, we have two books by Escapees member Jerry Minchey about living full-time in an RV.

One way of travel that is less familiar to us is by wagon train. This way is featured in our third book, which is the true story of an intrepid adventurer and his brother reliving the experience of taking a covered-wagon trip along the Oregon Trail from beginning to end.

Motorhome and RV Retirement Living
The Most Enjoyable and Least Expensive Way to Retire
Jerry Minchey #117566 • StonyRiver Media 2015
ISBN: 978-0-9844968-4-6 • Paperback $13.95 • Kindle $2.99

Jerry Minchey has been a full-time RVer for over three years and is the author of a number of books about RVing. He is also Webmaster of www.LifeRV.com, an impressive Website that includes articles, videos and other information supporting the lifestyles he is promoting. The two books featured, address two different groups of RVers.

Like Jerry, many full-time RVers are retired and living off their savings, investments and other income. The first book address the issues that retirees may ask such as how to manage to live a life on the road of freedom, adventure, travel and fun while living inexpensively and relatively stress-free. Dealing with issues such as purchasing an RV, making the break from your previous home, keeping in touch and dealing with the day-to-day RV living situations are included.

But the demographics of RVing are changing as a new group of RVers in the 34-to-54-year-old age group are emerging. Most of these RVers need to have an income and some are traveling with children. Jerry discusses how to find income-producing situations from work-camping opportunities where rent space is provided, to running a business from your RV. From singles traveling alone, to couples working from their RVs, Jerry includes personal stories from those who are making a success of it. Interesting ways to make a living are included, as well as general RV information about buying, driving and traveling.

Both of Jerry’s books are informative and contain Website links that even cover complete remodeling of old buses, forums for RVers sharing their experiences, ideas for renovating and general RVing concerns. The Internet is a marvelous way to learn new techniques, share ideas and learn from other’s mistakes.

Jerry’s writing style is easy to read and often humorous. In his chapter about traveling with children, he says, when asked, “What about kids?” He replied, “I suggest you keep them.” But, all kidding aside, his advice and information are invaluable.

The Oregon Trail
A New American Journey
Rinker Buck • Simon & Schuster 2015
ISBN: 978-1-4516-5916-0 • Hardcover: $28

Fifteen years before the Civil War, adventuresome Americans began a trek across the Great Plains on the Oregon Trail. More than 400,000 pioneers made this journey, and it is considered by scholars the single largest land migration in history. It defined the American national character as courageous and willing to travel for a better life. After the Louisiana Purchase in 1803 and the successful war with Mexico in 1846, securing the majority of the American West, this migration managed to unite the two coasts of this mighty nation.

Rinker Buck, a self-described history junkie, began his study of these courageous pioneers when he visited an historical site in Kansas near the beginning of the Oregon Trail. Hiking over the rise near the interpretive center during the magical hour at dusk, he could almost imagine the stream of covered wagons heading off toward the West. He was hooked and wanted to recreate the journey. He knew what he had to do—buy a team of mules and a covered wagon and spend the summer traveling the Trail.

That winter he binge-read everything he could get his hands on, including many histories and copies of diaries from the pioneers. Then he and his brother, Nick, purchased the necessary equipment and planned the trip. Using the journals of some of the pioneers was helpful. Their adventures, many of them scary, with breakdowns and periods of time when they seemed to be lost, were interspersed with the magic of the journey.

From reading about the trip planning, you will learn a lot about mules, harnesses, provisioning and locating a builder for a special covered wagon suitable for the rough trek. It’s fascinating to discover what was necessary to manage this trip. The book is filled with historical facts, advertisements for wagons, the journal entries of those who took the trail in the 1800s and old photos. Rinker Bunk is a wonderful writer. He has a great talent for description so you can almost be right there with them on all the facets of the trip. What an exciting trip and an informative read.

Windsor—The Birthplace of Vermont

www.windsorvt.org

When you hear the word “Vermont,” you may think of Green Mountains, Ben and Jerry’s Ice Cream or of Stowe with the Trapp Family Lodge from The Sound of Music family. You probably wouldn’t think of Windsor.

American Precision Museum

One reason to stop in Windsor is to visit the American Precision Museum, the “birthplace” of interchangeable parts. It is housed in an 1846 building that was the water-powered armory and machine shop. In 1966, the building became a national historic landmark. With a new approach to production and division of labor, the founders modernized the way a factory operated. These changes were the key to mass production that forever changed industry. Many of the machinists who worked there went on to develop other companies such as Winchester Rifle Co., White Sewing Machine, Brown and Sharpe, Smith and Wesson, Remington, and Jones and Lamson.

Before entering the museum proper, there is an area for hands-on manipulation of wooden machines, levers, pulleys, etc. This would be of particular interest to children. There is also a 3-D printer with the cover off so you can see inside and how it works. In the main museum there are several adult-oriented hands-on activities.

In the mid 1800s, during the time of the Mexican War, the founders negotiated a contract with the U.S. Army to make 10,000 rifles, all with interchangeable parts. Guns had never been made fast or with interchangeable parts. The contract was to have them completed in three years. The founders had not yet built the building or machines to make the guns, but completed the job 18 months ahead of schedule. They were the only government gun contract to make the guns, but completed the job 18 months ahead of the contract time. Thus they went on to win many more contracts, which changed the face of war from then on.

In 1851 they went to an exhibition in London. The British were so impressed with the interchangeable parts that they sent people to Windsor to study the Windsor system, ordered machines from them and had them make 25,000 rifles in Windsor until the British could get their shop open and running in England.

In the center of the museum is an area where paid high school students and adult volunteers demonstrate the old machines and modern technology, pointing out how the modern came from the old. A man demonstrated how to make a gear and a small goblet for a doll house, which he then gave to us.

The museum also had two display cases of miniature machines. John Aschauer had built many machines over his career. Later, from memory, he made working models of these machines right down to the tiny screws, nuts and bolts. It took him an estimated 12 years of full-time employment to create all the machines he made.

Cornish-Windsor Covered Bridge

Another historic site in Windsor is the Cornish-Windsor Covered Bridge, which spans the Connecticut River, connecting Vermont with New Hampshire. It’s the longest historic covered bridge in the U.S. and has two lanes, which is relatively rare. (A longer covered bridge was built in Ohio in 2008.) On the New Hampshire side, a sign says, “Walk your horses or pay two dollars fine.” The height limit is about nine feet, so don’t try to drive your RV over it.

Republic of Vermont

Besides being known for the birthplace of interchangeable parts, Windsor is the birthplace of the Republic of Vermont. In July 1777, 72 delegates met in Elijah West’s tavern to write and adopt a constitution for the “Free and Independent Republic of Vermont.” They not only were declaring themselves free and independent from Great Britain, but also from the 13 colonies. Up until that time, New Hampshire and New York had been disputing who owned this land between the two states.

This constitution has some unique features. It was the first in the country to prohibit slavery, the first to establish...
voting rights for all men, regardless of income or property ownership and the first to institute public education.

Windsor was the part-time capital of the republic from 1777 to 1808. After 14 years as an independent republic, Vermont became the 14th state to join the union in 1791. We had hoped to visit the Old Constitution House where this took place, but it is only open on weekends. However, we enjoyed walking a short trail behind the Old Constitution House, which led to the small Lake Runnemed and park.

• Dining

Another place to check out while in town, is the former railroad station, which is now the upscale Windsor Station Restaurant at 26 Depot Avenue (windsorstationvt.com). Or you may prefer a meal in the Windsor Diner at 135 Main Street, which was moved to Windsor from Massachusetts in 1961.

• Outdoors

If you like the outdoors, go to 1747 Hunt Road in Windsor to enjoy the Cider Hill Gardens and Gallery, with the nature paintings of Gary Milek and the gardening artistic skills of his wife, Sarah (www.ciderhillgardens.com).

• Artisans Park

Head a few miles north on Rte. 5 for the Artisans Park (36 Park Road), where you will find a brewery, distillery, cheese shop, sculpture garden, glass factory, pottery and river outfitter. Behind Artisans Park is the 14-acre Path of Life Garden that features 18 outdoor sculptures (greatriveroutfitters.com).

Windsor is located on Rte. 5, between exits 8 and 9, off Interstate 91. American Precision Museum is located on Rte 5 (196 Main St.), at the south end of Windsor Village, south of the stoplight at the intersection of Main and Union/Bridge streets. It is open daily, 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., May through October, but check the Website for the exact dates (www.americanprecision.org).

The Old Constitution House is on Rte. 5 (16 Main St.) at the north end of town. It is open weekends, May through October, from 11:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Their Website may say it’s open other days however, that was not the case when we were there.

The streets in Windsor are wide and not crowded, so it may be possible to park an RV, but, to be on the safe side, it would be better to come with your tow vehicle only. And remember, the covered bridge has a height limit of nine feet, two inches.

Saint-Gaudens National Historic Site
Cornish, New Hampshire
www.nps.gov/saga/index.htm
If you visit Windsor, Vermont, you may want to cross the Connecticut River to New Hampshire on the longest historic covered bridge (height limit of 9' 2") in the U.S. and drive north less than two miles on route 12A to Saint-Gaudens National Historic Site. This site is New Hampshire’s only national park and is only one of two national parks dedicated to a visual artist. It honors Augustus Saint-Gaudens, a renowned sculptor. Saint-Gaudens’ works are in Chicago, Boston, New York and many other places. The national park service owns the patent and the casts, so it has recast a few sculptures to display on the grounds. They are magnificent. The “Shaw Memorial,” with the original in Boston Commons, was our favorite. It honors the black soldiers during the Civil War. The detail is spectacular, even behind the horse, though no one can see behind the horse without some kind of body contortion.

The grounds are beautiful as is the family home. After Saint-Gaudens died, his wife and her family started a foundation and treated the family home as a museum. Fifty years ago, they turned it over to the National Park Service. After an old inn was rebuilt to become their family home, no other family lived in it, thus the original furnishings are still there.

After watching an 18-minute introductory film at the visitor center, we took a guided tour that explained many of his sculptures on the grounds and in two of his studios. After that, we took the house tour.

In the Ravine studio, a small building where Saint-Gaudens worked to get away from the larger studio, we watched an artist in residence working on a sculpture to commemorate 150 years since Lincoln’s assassination and 50 years of the grounds being owned by the Park Service.

After that, we walked the Ravine Trail, which led to a small area that had been dammed up for a swimming hole, that Saint-Gaudens used until he built a real swimming pool. We ended our visit by walking two miles of trails in the scenic woods. A side trail took us to the historic Blow-Me-Down Mill, dam and pond. Since the Park Service was out of trail maps, I took a photo of their laminated copy to use for our walk and was glad to have had that resource when we came to trail junctions.

Saint-Gaudens National Historic Site is located on route 12A in Cornish, New Hampshire (N 43° 29.9436' W 72° 22.2870'). It is 12 miles south of West Lebanon and 12 miles north of Claremont. As you drive up the road to the park, there is parking for RVs on the left before the general car parking, which is on the right. The RV parking is a grassy field, but there should be plenty of room.

The park is open from Saturday of Memorial Day weekend to October 31. Park exhibit buildings are open daily from 9:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and the grounds until dusk. From the last Sunday in June to the last Sunday in August a concert is held every Sunday at 2:00 p.m. The performances carry on a tradition by Augustus Saint-Gaudens, who often held concerts in his studio for family and friends. Concerts are included with normal paid admission to the site. The house, Aspet, closes at 4:00 p.m. on concert Sundays.

Historic Fort Robinson State Park and Museum
3200 US 20, Crawford, NE 69339
Park: 308-665-2900 • Museum: 308-665-2919
It isn’t often you can enjoy camping at a real fort. Historic Fort Robinson in scenic northwest Nebraska has a campground in the middle of its 22,000 acres with all amenities. Here you will find horseback trail riding, a big swimming pool, fishing and a museum right on the premises. The campground itself has hookups for large rigs, no-frills tent spaces and all sizes in between in a pleasant park atmosphere with green lawns, trees and excellent access.

It’s an American historic location, where tribes of Sioux (Lakota today) Indians mingled with the ever-increasing numbers of interlopers, like fur traders, explorers, railroad workers and Conestoga wagon pioneers. Whether you are a kid, parent or a grandparent, this place offers a great way to learn history.

Before staying there, I’d never heard of Fort Robinson. It is located on highway 20, near the town of Crawford, a settlement that grew up to serve the needs of those at the fort. The fort operated from 1874 to 1948 and is one of the last real forts on active duty. You practically can hear reveille and see sleepy enlisted men weaving out of their quarters to care for their horses or have breakfast.

Fort Robinson was established as a military post in 1874 to protect the Red Cloud Agency, formed in 1873, to distribute the goods and cattle that the federal government had promised the Indians in return for peace in the Dakota goldfields. The Sioux were angry that the promised supplies were slow to arrive or not sufficient. The troopers were involved in protecting travelers on the Sidney-Deadwood South Dakota gold trail, and also were called to help quell civil disorders amongst travelers in the area. These diverse travelers were mostly men except for women and children in pioneer wagons passing Scott’s Bluff, a bit south of the fort, as they had been since the 1840s.

Only three years after its establishment, Fort Robinson became the site of the well-reported killing of Lakota chief and hero, Crazy Horse, by, of all people, an American Indian trooper during an alleged resistance.

The history influences today’s special attractions for the RV family. If you have your own horse, you can board it in these former cavalry stables. In addition to twice-daily horseback rides (rentals available), there are breakfast cookouts four mornings a week, a buffalo stew cookout four evenings a week and a steak cookout at the base of the spectacular buttes that ring the park.

Meanwhile, the unusual background of the fort includes other exciting history. In 1885, the Ninth Infantry Division sent its first “buffalo soldiers” to Fort Robinson for specific duty and the Tenth Infantry followed, in 1902. With so much land available, the fort was a Remount Division from 1918 until 1948. This was a program of the U.S. Army for improving the quality of the cavalry horses. Chosen stallions, usually thoroughbreds, were sent to Fort Robinson and bred with suitable mares to result in healthy, hardy stock, mostly for cavalry use. War dogs were trained there, too, during WWII. The family can walk to the museum to learn about this period or hop aboard a wagon pulled by friendly horses along the fort’s roads that connect the many buildings still in good shape and open to the public.

Within a few miles one can drive to geologically exciting places such as the Hudson-Meng dig, where archaeologists and scientists are investigating the thousands of bison bones found there with a few others. Or visit Toadstool Rock at the edge of a badlands, named for the odd-shaped land remaining from a probable ancient flood. A few old and active ranches are open to tourists. And one has old buildings that represent a tiny Western village.

Besides the Fort Robinson Museum, there’s the Trailside Museum, which focuses more on the geology and natural history of the Pine Ridge area, rising to almost 4,000 feet altitude from the level, rolling green fields so typical of Nebraska. All of this is at the pretty and well-kept RV campground at Fort Robinson, in the northwest corner of Nebraska, at the intersection of 20 and 2/71, a few miles from 385.

LED lighting technology is advancing so fast, it’s hard to keep up. I have LED lights everywhere in my RV and have converted my Maglites to Cree LEDs. I had been looking for a good LED work light and came across this pocket-sized marvel. The NEBO Larry-C flashlight is, well, different. It utilizes a new COB (chip on board) LED array and produces 170 lumens of light in a wide floodlight-like beam. The light from this tiny flashlight is amazing. It will run four to five hours on three AAA batteries (included), is water and impact resistant and has excellent build quality. Add a magnetic pocket clip and a waterproof switch that is included, and you have a small work light that is not another piece of cheap junk. The magnetic clip will hold the light to any steel surface, and the clip swivels 180 degrees, letting you direct the light output where you need it. I now carry these lights in all my vehicles. Maybe you should, too.

A black bear can outrun, outclimb, outjump, outswim and outfight any man alive, and even outthink some of them.

Most of us would like to see a black bear out in the wild. It’s thrilling, assuming we see him from the safety of our vehicle. So, what if we have a close encounter with a bear on the trail? I have photographed and written about bears and other wildlife for years, and have experienced several startling encounters along the trails. The most amusing happened in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

My wife, our teenage daughter and I, and another couple, were walking a trail in May, during mating season for black bears. We were about a mile or so from our RV when a fair-size black bear strolled out of the forest and sat down in the middle of the trail, maybe one hundred feet in front of us. Naturally, we stopped dead in our tracks. A second and much bigger black bear ambled out of the woods, walked a couple steps in our direction before he stopped and began, with head lowered, to sway from side to side.

Out of the corner of my eye, I saw Jill begin a slow-motion turn while leisurely lifting her left foot in preparation for an immediate departure. I whispered, “Jill, don’t run.”

Well, Jill did not run; neither did the bears. After giving us all a thorough visual assessment, they slowly faded back into the wilderness, and we all lived to tell the tale.

Had Jill run, one or both bears would probably have given chase since that is a natural instinct. They would have won the race.

Bears are so funny and cute with their shuffling walk and animated expressions, that it is easy to underestimate how strong, dangerous and deadly they can be. They can roll a large log over with a single paw. They can virtually run up a tree and jump out of one from 30 feet up without any apparent injury to themselves. They are strong swimmers. Their vision is poor but their sense of smell is powerful.

A bear is particularly dangerous in the following situations: with cubs, feeding, hungry, injured, breeding, surprised by humans or when he has lost his fear of people (or if a person has lost his fear of a bear) or he feels cornered. The bear is the only one who knows if he feels cornered; it could be in the middle of a field.

Their range covers eight to 10 square miles or more. Black bears are nomadic and wander their home range, following animal or human...

trails. They only leave their home range if food becomes scarce.

Male black bears are up to three-and-a-half feet tall at the shoulder. He may be as long as six feet and weigh up to 600 pounds. Females are smaller, but equally dangerous. Never come between a mom and her little ones.

Black bears breed from May through July and “den up” between October and January, depending on how far north they live. This is not hibernation. They sleep lightly and can be instantly awake.

The family leaves the den from March to early May. The mother raises her cubs on her own. They stay with her through their first winter; some stay until the next fall. Baby bears play constantly, and mom runs them up a tree when danger approaches.

Black bears are found along almost the entire eastern seaboard and over to southern Louisiana. They live in the Appalachians and are in New England, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, most of Canada, Alaska and south through northern California and in the Rocky Mountain States down to Mexico. In the east, they are usually forest and swamp dwellers. Out West, they like mountains that are below seven thousand feet.

They are most active at dawn and dusk. Like any intelligent creature, they may take an afternoon nap.

Along a trail in black bear country, you may find bear tracks, bear scat and maybe a bear tree.

The tracks look as if they were made by a flat-footed person wearing moccasins, except the small toe is on the inside and the big toe is on the outside. The front paws are about five-inches wide and four-inches long. The hind foot is also five-inches wide, but is seven- to nine-inches long.

The bear scat will contain almost anything since the black bear eats about everything. Bear droppings are similar to a large dog’s, but have flat ends.

They are classed as carnivores, but they will eat berries, fruit, insects, leaves, twigs, small mammals, snakes and carrion. They tear apart logs for grubs, beetles, crickets and ants. And bears do love honey. A bear will rip a honey tree apart and eat honey, honeycomb, bees, larvae and all.

He is an opportunist feeder and works no harder than necessary to find food.

You may come upon a tree with the bark stripped off from just above head height. Both male and female bears make “bear trees.” They scratch their backs and heads on the tree, leaving not only their hair but their scent as well. More than one bear may use the same tree.

There is one other thing you may observe on a trail in black bear country—a bear!

The black bear’s (Ursus americana) ability to eat almost anything and to move quickly and quietly helps it survive even in developed areas. He rarely makes vocal sounds. Secretive and silent, a bear can disappear like a ghost. I have seen people unknowingly walk by a bear not 20 feet away.

Black bears generally give humans a wide berth, but they do occasionally kill someone. They don’t like surprises, so don’t be too quiet on the trail. Talk to your companions as you hike. You and the bear will probably never meet if he knows you are there.

Other than not trying to outrun a bear, some things you can do to bring the chance meeting of you and the bear to a happy end is to make a lot of noise. Shouting and screaming may scare the bear away. Stand up tall; pick up little kids. Look as big as you can. Do not look directly at the bear. Direct eye contact may be interpreted as a threat.

Keep your group tightly together and slowly back away. The bear will most likely do the same. He may give a false charge or stand up on his hind feet, which is extraordinarily intimidating. If he shows no intention of backing down, throw rocks or sticks at him as you continue to back away. Do not squat or kneel since this makes you appear smaller. If you have a backpack, leave it. He may think you have food in it. You’ll most likely be okay.

If a black bear attacks, try to keep your stomach and head covered. Fight back with anything available.

Black bears live from 12 to 15 years in the wild. They have few enemies and fear almost nothing.

When fed by sightseers, they become a danger to people and themselves. A powerful wild animal that has lost its natural discomfort around people is dangerous. Park policies vary, but most will only move a problem bear twice. The only thing left to do is kill the bear for doing what’s normal for a bear.

We can help the black bear by reporting to park rangers when we see potential problems, and we can educate our children to respect wildlife.

Mostly, we can enjoy the beautiful black bear from a distance and take pleasure in the thought that they are out there in the wilderness, right now, living their lives just doing what comes naturally.

Berry, Vicki #69191-February 10, 2016: (James, 122 Rainbow Dr., #2227, Livingston, TX 77399-1022) My wife died in her sleep. She enjoyed traveling in our RV and visiting many wonderful places and meeting new friends along the way. To Vicki, 12 years on the road were some of the happiest moments of her life. The friends we met along the way will remember my Vic for her humor, smiles, laughter and friendliness.

Brock, Ben #86887-January 21, 2016: (Betsy, 230 Rainbow Dr., #13059, Livingston, TX 77399-2030) Ben died quietly in Houston surrounded by his family after a long battle with pulmonary fibrosis. His greatest joy was traveling to 48 U.S. states, five Canadian provinces and meeting people along the way during 13 years of full-time RVing. Those who heard his many stories never forgot them. We volunteered in many public parks, museums and other locations, including the Battleship Texas, in Houston; the Atlantic salmon fish hatchery, in Maine; the Museum of Family Camping, in New Hampshire and several state parks. We also worked for five years after his first retirement. Ben was buried in Memphis in historic Elmwood Cemetery.

Coler, Jimmie Sue #34782-November 22, 2015: (George, 3521 W. Calla Rd., Canfield, OH 44406) Jimmie Sue battled cancer for two years. She enjoyed every moment of being in Escapees RV Club and appreciated every hug she and her husband received. Thanks to Escapees, she got to visit 48 states. It was her dream.

Crispell, Pearl #9241-January 30, 2016: (Bud, 2700 Avenue N, #309, Rosenberg, TX 77471) It has been a long and fine journey of nearly 30 years as an active Escapees member, seventeen years as a Saguaro SKP Co-Op owner, beginning at its opening, and six years at Escapees CARE. Bud and I worked, played and made many loving, great friends. We had many articles written for Escapees magazine; this will be my last. Thank you, SKPs. (Written by Pearl and given to a friend to be submitted.)

Farinacci, Jack #2063-February 27, 2016: Jack and his wife, Sharon, were long-time members of Escapees. He was fun-loving and enjoyed camping and meeting new people. Jack looked forward to traveling south every winter with his camper and exploring new areas. (Reported by friend Ann Nelson #90358.)

George, Edward David #1808-January 23, 2016: (Mary Lou, 45323 Park Sierra Dr., #220, Coarsegold, CA 93614) After a year of many hospitalizations and surgeries, a blood clot caused a fatal stroke. In his early years, Edward served in the Navy on a supply ship called the Mt. Baker, between Korea and Vietnam. He came to Park Sierra in 1994, actively volunteering for many jobs at this special park where I will remain. Edward was 82 years old.

Parr, Donald #6961-October 15, 2015 (Ruth, 75 Money Hill Road, Chepachet, RI 02814-1305) As lifetime Escapees members, we were original members of The Resort SKP Co-op in Florida, and we had many fond memories from those 25 years. At Escapade, we were on the parking committee, chairman of the parking committee, chairman of the outdoor market area and coordinators. Don enjoyed traveling, Escapades and time at The Resort. I will continue to live at home.
